NTHE ROODING WILD

IN THE BROODING WILD

PR 6005 U42 135 1905

IDGWELL ULLUM

Ex address dalverstratis ALBERTAEASIS

Portland Oregon.

Genil 1t 1900.

Do not the 4 But he turn.

Works of Ridgwell Cullum The Stery of the Fore River

New England Building Boston, Mass.

The Hound from the North L.
In the Brooding Wild L.
L. C. PAGE & COMPANY

Reach

THE FURIOUS, NOISELESS LASHING OF THE TAIL "

In the Brooding Wild

By RidgwellCullum

**dusther of "The Bluer of the Foss River Ranch," "The Blues of the Foss River Ranch," "The Blues of from the North," "etc.

**With a Promisphers by

Boston . L. C. Page &

Copyright, 1905
By L. C. Page & Company
(1900sepany)
All rights respect

Published May, 1905

COLONIAL PRESS

Biotrotype and France by C. H. Simueds & Co. Basin, U. S. A.

CONTENTS

DIAPPRA	ON THE MOUNTAINSIDE		PACE 1
n.	WHICH TELLS OF THE WHITE SOURS .	1 15
ш	THE QUEST OF THE WHITE SQUAW	٠	34
IV	THE HOODED MAN		55
			79
VI			93
			112
VIII.	THE UNQUENCHABLE FIRE		130
			142
x			157
XI	THE GATHERING OF THE FOREST LEGIONS		174
XII	WHERE THE LAWS OF MIGHT ALONE PREVAI	L	188
XIII	OUT ON THE NORTHLAND TRAIL .		213
XIV	WHO SHALL FATHOM THE DEPTHS OF .
	Woman's Love?		228
XV	THE TRAGEOU OF THE WILD		239

IN THE BROODING WILD

CHAPTER I

ON THE MOUNTAINSIDE

To the spirit which broods over the supenduse solutions of the northern Rockness, the soul of man, with all its complex impulses, is but so manch platters material which it happes to in row nuterable ends. For the man whose lot is cast in the heart of these which, the drama of life assally moved with a tre-mondous simplicity toward the sudden and sombre the state of the sunder words in which he lives does in upon him and makes him its own the lives does in upon him and makes him its own of the sunder which-lowers of the earth, the moumerable interests and activities of working cities, the resides index and currents of an eager ovaluation, take on the remotences of a neager ovaluation, take on the remotences of a foresm. The paces or well of anossu less to him.

than the battles of Wing and Fur. His interests are all in that world over which he seeks to rule by the iaw of trap and gun, and in the war of defence which he wages against the aggression of the elements. He returns insensibly to the type of the primitive main, strong, patient, and enduring

High up on the mountainside, overlooking a valley so deep and wide as to daze the brain of the gazing buttan, stands a squat building. It seems to have been crushed into the slone by the drawing force of the vicious mountain storms to which it is open on three sides. There is no shelter for it It stands out bravely to sunshine and storm alike with the contemptuous indifference of familiarity It is a dugout, and, as its name implies, is built half in the ground. Its solitary door and single parchment covered window overlook the valley, and the white path in front where the snow is packed hard by the tramp of does and men, and the ruppers of the dog-sled. Below the slope bears away to the woodlands. Above the hut the overshadowing mountain rises to dazzling heights; and a further, but thin, belt of primeval forest extends up, up, until the eternal snows are reached and the air will no longer support life. Even to the hardy hunters, whose home this is, those upper forests are sealed chapters in Nature's story.

3

Below the dugout, and beyond the valley, lie countless lesser hills, set so closely that their divisions are lost in one smooth, dark expanse of forest. Blackened rifts are visible here and there, but they have little meaning, and only help to materialize what would otherwise wear an utterly ghostly appearance. The valley in front is so vast that its contemplation from the hillside sends a shudder of fear through the heart. It is dark, dreadfully dark and gloomy, although the great stretch of pine forest, which reaches to its uttermost confines, bears upon its drooping branches the white coat of winter.

The valley is split by a river, now frozen to its bed But, from the hut door, the rift which marks its course in the dark earpet cannot be seen.

In the awesome view no life is revealed. The forests shadow the earth and every living thing upon it, and where the forest is not there has the snow to the depth of many feet. It is a scene of solemn grandeur, over which broods silence and illimitable space

Out of the deathly stillness comes a long-drawn sigh It echoes down the billside like the weary expression of patient suffering from some poor creature impresoned where ancient glacier and everlasting snows hold place. It passes over the low pitched roof of the dugout, it plays about the 4 angles and under the wate reaching eaves. It set do correctings who is soon that startes the occupants. It passes on and forces its way through the dense, complaining forest trees. The opposition it receives intensifies its plaint, and it trushes angrely through the branches. Then, for awhile, all is still again. But the coming of that break it is a similar to the amount of the art of the force the most into plas made a difference in the notion. Something strange has happened. One focal solution and cannot cell what at it is. It may be clearly only the control of the co frost particles. Something has happened

Suddenly a dismal howl splits the air, and its echoes intensify the gloom. Another howl succeeds it, and then the weird cry is taken up by other voices.

And ere the echoes die out another breath comes down from the hiltop, a breath less patient, angry down from the hilltop, a breath less patient, angry with a biting fierceness which speaks of patience exhausted and a spirit of retaliation. It catches up the loose snow as it comes and hurls

It defautly at every obstruction with the viciousness of an exasperated woman. Now it shakes the dugout, and, as it passes on, shrieks invective at the world over which it rushes, and everything it touches feels the bitter lash of the whipping snow it bears upon its bosom. Again come the strange howls of the animal world, but they sound more distant and the echoes are muffled, for those who cry out have sought the woodland shelter, where the mountain breath exhausts itself against the countless legions of the pines. \

Ere the shriek has died out, another blast comes down the mountainside, and up rises the fine-powdered snow like a thin fog. From the valley a rush of wind comes up to meet it, and the two battle for supremacy. While the conflict rages fresh clouds of anow rise in other directions and rush to the scene of action. Encountering each other on the way they struggle together, each intolerant of interference, until the shrieking is heard on every hand. and the snow for thickens, and the dull sun above grows duller, and the lurid "sun does" look like evil coals of fire burning in the sky Now, from every direction, the wind tears along in a mad fury. The forest tops sway as with the roll of some mighty sea swept by the sudden blast of a tornado. In the rage of the storm the woodland giants creak out their impotent protests. The wind battles and tears at everything, there is no cessation in its onslanght darkness settles over the valley. The forest is indden, the hills are gone, the sun is obscured, and a ferce desolation reigns. Darker and darker it becomes as the buzzard gains force. And the cries of the forest beasts add to the chaos and din of the mountain storie.

And as the fight waxes the fog rises and a grey

The driving cold penetrates, with the bits of invisible arrows, to the meters of the dugout. The two men who sit without pile up the fuel in the locative which alone makes hig possible for them in such wather. The roof grossis and bends behalf the bends and bends behalf the bends above it, a tonger the arrow and resource of the crack above it, a tendar year of monitoring that the behalf with the crack above it, a tendar year of monitoring that the crack above it, a tendar year of monitoring that the crack above it, a tendar year of the surface amonghors.

"I stema live flow ones, Misk," observed one of the men, as he shut the stove, after carefully packing several cord-wood sticks within its insatiable maw. He was of medium height but of large muscle His appearance was that of a man in the prime of life. His hair, above a face tanned and lined by exposure to the weather, was long and grey, as was the beard which curled about his chin. He was clad in a shirt of rough-tanned buckskin and trousers of thick moleskin. His feet were shod with moccasms which were brilliantly beaded Similar bead-work adorned the front of the weather-proof shirt H.s companion was a slightly younger and somewhat larger man. The resemblance he bore to his comrade indicated the relationship between them. They were brothers.

Ralph and Nicol Westley were born and bred in that dupout. Their father and mother were long since dead, dving in the harness of the toil they had both loved, and which they bequeathed to their children. These two men had never seen the prairie. They had never left their mountain fastnesses. They had never even gone south to where the railway bores its way through the Wild. They had been born to the life of the trapper lives, for they were creatures of Nature who understood and listened when she spoke. They had no other education. The men lived together har monsously, practically independent of all other human companionship. At long intervals, when pelts had accumulated and supplies had run low, they visited the cabin of an obscure trader. Otherwise they were cut off and knew no other. They hand and enjoyed their

from the world and rejoiced in their isolation. "Yes, we've had the warnin' this week past," rejoined Nick solemnly, as he affectionately polished 8

the but of his rifle with a rag greased with bear's fat. "Them 'patch' winds at surrise an sunset and a enter nothin' I lowe I fell's hard on the lects of this breece. When the wind quits thereII be snow, an's now means us hen' banked a. Say, she's boomin'. Har's to her. You can hear her tearm herself loose from someres up on the hilltopa." Nick looked round the faut as though expecting to see the storm break through the walls of them shelter. A heavy storm always affected the super-strious side of these mer's natures. A blazard to them was as the Evd Signat of the mountains. They always possessed the feeling, somewhere deep down in their hearts, that the states do a soom was deep the storm of th

Ralph had planted himself upon an upturised bucket, and sat with his hands thrust out towards the stowe. He was smoking, and his eyes were directed in a pensive survey at a place where the black tron of the stove was steadily reddening. Presently he looked up.

"Ha' ye fed the dogs, lad?" he asked.

" Ay "

The two relapsed into silence. The creaking of 9

tions with every fresh burst which struck their home; it was as though they personally felt each shock, and their bones ached with the strain of battle. The smoke curled up slowly from Ralph's pipe and a thin cloud hovered just beneath the roof The red patch on the stove widened and communicated stself to the stovepipe. Presently the trapper the hat was like the protest of a wooden slap riding a heavy storm at sea. The men shifted their posi-leaned forward, and, closing the damper, raked away the ashes with a chip of wood. Nick looked up and la.d his gun aside, and, rising, stepped over to the stove

" Makes we feel good to hear the fire roarm' when it's stormm' bad. Ther' ain't no tellin' when this'll let up." He jerked his head backward to imply the storm. "It's sharp. Mighty sharp," replied his brother " Say -- "

He broke off and bent his head in an attitude of keen attention. He held his pipe poised in his right hand, whilst his eyes focused themselves on a side of bacon which hung upon the wall

Nick had turned towards the door. His attitude was intent also, he, too, was listening acutely

The howling elements continued to best furiously upon the house and the din was appalling, but these two men, keen-eared, trained to the life of their mountains, had heard a sound which was not the storm, nor of the forest creatures doling their woful cries beneath the shelter of the woods.

Slowly Ralph's eyes moved from the bacon and passed over the smoke stained wooden wall of the hut Nor d.d they pause again until they looked into the eyes of his brother. Here they fixed themselves and the working brains of the two men seemed to communicate one with the other Neither of them was likely to be mistaken. To hear a sound in those wilds was to recognize it interringly

"A cry." said Nick "Some 'un out in the storm," replied Ralph "A neche."

Raigh shook his head. "A neche would 'a' know'd this was comin'

He'd 'a' made camp 'Tain't a neche Hark!" The heat of the storm seemed to drown all other sounds, and yet those two men listened. It is certain that what they heard would have been lost to most ears

Ralph rose deliberately There was no haste, nor was there any hesitation. His intention was written on his face.

"The life-line," he said briefly

Out into the awful storm the two men plunged a few moments later. There was no thought of their own comfort in their minds. They had heard a cry—the cry of a human being, and they were prepared to lend such aid as lay in their power. They did not pause to wonder at a voice other than

They did not pause to wonder at a voice other than their own in those regions. Some one was caught in the storm, and they innew that such a disaster meast certain death to the poor wretch if they did not go to the resione. The terror of the blurard was expressed in the significant words Rajhi had uttered. Even these hardy men of the wild dared not venture beyond their door without the lifetime which was always keet handy.

With their furs covering every part of them but their eves and noses they plunged into the fog of blinding snow. They could see nothing around them:—this could not even see their own feet. Each gripped a long pole, and used his other hand to greap the line.

They moved down the beaten path with certain step. Three yards from the diagout and the house was obscured. The wind buffeled them from every years and the country of the work buffeled them from every years.

step. Three yards from the dugost and the house was obscured. The wind buffeted them from every direction, and they were forced to bend their heads in order to keep their eyes open. The whole attack of the wind now seemed to centre round those two struggling human creatures. It is the way of the blizzard. It blows apparently from every direction, and each obstacle in its chaotic path becomes the special object of its onslaught.

A forceful gust, too sudden to withstand, would drive them, blind, groning, from their nath, and a moment later they would be hurled like shuttlecodes in the opposite direction. They staggered under the burden of the storm, and ground for the solid foothold of the track with their poles, and so they slowly gamed their way

Their strengous life had rendered them uncomplaining, and they laboured in silence. No emergency but they were ready to meet with a promptness that was almost automatic. A slip upon the decliping path and the fall was checked by the aid of the poles which both men used as skilfully as any guide upon the Alps. These contests with the elements were as much a part of their lives as were their battles with the animal world

After awhile Ralph halted, he thrust his pole deep into the snow and held his position by its aid. Then, throwing up his head, as might any wolf, he opened his throat and uttered a prolonged cry It rose high above the storm in a manner which only the cry of a mountain or forest bred man can. It rushed forth borne unwillingly upon the shrieking wind, and its sound almost instantly died out of the ears of the sender. But the men knew it was travelling. Nick followed his brother's example, and then Ralph gave out the mountain call again

Then they waited, listening A sound, faint and far off, came in answer to their cries. It was the human cry they had heard before. Ralph moved forward with Nick hard upon his heels. The line "paid out," and the points of the poles sought the hard earth beneath the snow They gained their way in spite of the storm, foot by foot, yard by yard. And, at short intervals, they paused and sent their cries hurtling upon the vicious wind. And to every cry came an answer, and every answer sounded nearer. They were on the only open track in the valley.

and both men knew that whoever was out in that storm must be somewhere upon it. Therefore they kept on.

- "The line's gettin' heavy," said Nick presently, "It's only a little further," replied Ralph.
- "By the weight o' the line, I reckon ther' ain't
- more'n fifty feet more."

"Maybe rt'll be 'nough," And Ralph was right.

Ten yards further on they almost fell over a dark mass lying in the snow. It was a huddled heap, as of a creature striving to shot out the attack of the storm. It was the attitude of one whose heart qualis with dread. It was the attitude of one, who, in possession of all his faculties and strength, head down to die. Rank cowardere was in that fur-clad figure, and the cress for help were as the weening of a fear-filled soil.

Ralph was down upon his knees in a moment, and all that the still figure conveyed was at once apparent to him. His hand fell heavily upon the man's shoulder, and he turned him over to look at his face.

The victim of the storm groaned; as yet he was unable to realize that help was at hand. Then, after several rough shakes, his head emerged from the folds of an enormous storm-collar.

As he looked up at the faces bending over him the two trappers uttered exclamations. "It's the trader!" said Ralph.

- It's the trader!" said Rali
- "Victor Gagnon!" exclaimed Nick.

CHAPTER II.

WHICH TELLS OF THE WHITE SOULAW

Titz normy day was followed by an equally stormy right. Induct the dupout at was possible, in a measure, to forget the terrors of the bluzzar raging costiles. The glowner growt there out its conforting warmth, and even the rank yellow light of the small oil lamp, when was suppended from one of the rather, gave a obsering suggestion of which was a supplied to the property of the p

The trappers had brought the rescued trader to the shelter of their humble abode; they had refreshed him with warmth and good food; they had given him the comfort of a share of their blankets, the use of their tobacco, all the hospitality they knew how to hestow

The three men were ranged round the room in various attitudes of repose. All were smoking heavily. On the top of the stove stood a tin billy full to the brim of steaming coffee, the scent of which, blending with the reek of strong tobacco, came soothingly to their nostrils.

Victor Gagnon was lying full length upon a pile of outspread blankers. His face was turned towards the stove, and his head was supported upon one hand. He looked none the worse for his adventure in the storm. He was a small, dark man of the superior French half-breed class. He had a narrow. ferret face which was oute good looking in a mean small way. He was clean shaven, and wore his straight black hair rather long. His clothes, now he had discarded his furs, showed to be of orthodox type, and quite unlike those of his hosts. He was a trader who kept a store away to the northeast of the dugout. He worked in connection with one of the big fur companies of the East, as an agent for the wholesale house dealing directly with trappers and Indiana.

This was the man with whom the Westleys traded, and they were truly glad that chance had put it in their power to befriend him. Their associations with him, although chiefly of a business nature, were decidedly friendly. Now they were listening to his slow, quiet, thoughtful talk. He was a man who liked talking.

but he always contrived that his andience should be those who gave information. These two backwoodsmen, simple as the vargin forests to which they belonged, were not keen enough to observe this. Victor Gagnon understood such men well. His Me had been made up of dealings with the mountain world and those who peopled it.

Nick, large and picturesque, sat tailor-fashion on his blankets, facing the glowing store with the unblinking, thoughtful stare of a large dog. Ralph was less luxurious. He was propped upon his upturned bucket, near enough to the fire to dispense the coffee without rising from his seat.

"Yup. It's a long trail for a man to make travellin' light an' on his lone." Victor was saving.

while his black eyes flashed swiftly upon his companions. "It's not a summer picnic, I guess. Maybe you're wondern" what I come for." He ceased speaking as a heavy blast shook the roof, and set the lamp swinging dangerously

"We're good an' pleased to see you -- " began

Ralph, in lus deliberate way; but Victor broke in upon him at once.

"O' course you are. It's like you an' Nick there to feel that way. But human natur's human natur', an' maybe som'eres you are jest wondern' what brought me along. Anyway, I come with a red hot purpose. Gee! but it's blowin' I ain't like to forget this storm." Gagnon shuddered as he thought of his narrow escape.

"Say," he went on, with an effort at playfulness.
"You two boys are pretty deep pretty deep."
He repeated himself reflectively. "An' you seem so easy and free, too. I do allow I'd never 'a' thought it. Ha, hal?"

He turned a smiling face upon his two friends and looked quizzeally from one to the other. His look was open, but behind it shone something else. There was a hungriness in his sharp, black eyes which would have been observed by any one other than these two backwoodsmen

"You allus was a bit fancy in your way o' speakins, Victor," observed Nick, responding to the speakin, victor; coserved likes, responding to the man's grin. "Hit the main trail, man. We ain't good at guessin'."

Raioschad looked steadily at the trader while he was speaking; now he turned slowly and poured out three pannisms of coffee. During the operation he turned hav sistor's workd over in his mind and something of their meaning came to him. He passed a tin to each of the others and speped meditatively from his own, while his eyes became fixed upon the face of the half-bree.

"Ther' was some fine pelts in that last parcel

o' furs you brought along," continued Victor.
"Three black foxes. But your skins is always the best I get."

Ralph nodded over his coffee, whilst he added his other hand to the support of the tin. Nick watched his brother a little anxiously. He, too, felt uneasy

"It's cur'us that you git more o' them black pelts around here than anybody eise higher up north. You're a sight better hunters than any duraed nache on the Peace River. An' them hides is worth more'n five times their weight in gold. You're makin' a pile o' bills. Say, you keep them black pelts anng away wi 'other stuff' o' value."

Gagnon paused and took a deep draught at his coffee.
"Say," he went on, with a knowing smile. "I "Say," he went on, with a knowing smile. "I guess them black foxes hved in a gold mine—"

He broke off and watched the effect of his gords. The others kept salence, only their eyes bitrayed them. The smoke curled slowly up from their pages and hung in a cloud about the creaking roof. The fire hurned fercely in the stove, and with every rush of wind outside there came a corresponding roar of flame up the stoveloor.

"Maybe you take my meanin'," said the Breed, assured that his words had struck home. "Them black furs was chock full o' grit — an' that grit was gold-dust. Guess that dust didn't grow in them furs, an' I 'lowe foxes don't fancy a bed o' such stuff. Say, boys, you've struck gold in this layout o' youra That's what's brought me out in this all-first storm."

The two brothers exchanged rapid glances and then Ralph spoke for them both. "You're smart, Victor That's so. We've been workin' a patch o' pay-dirt for night on to twelve month. But it's worked out; clear out to the bedrock. It wa'n't jest a great find, though I 'lows, while it lasted, we took a tidy wage out o' it. —"

"An' what might you call a 'tidy wage'?" asked the Bress, in a tour of disappointense. The knew the Bress, in a tour of disappointense. The knew the best of the position of the position of the best of the best of the position of the best of the position of the position

He watched Ralph keenly while he awaited his reply, sitting up in his eagerness.

"Seventy-fi' dollars a day," Ralph spoke without

Victor's eyes sparkled.

"Each?" he asked.

"No, on shares."

There was another long silence while the voice of the storm was loud without. Victor Gagnon was thinking hard, but his face was callin, his expression almost indifferent. More coffee was drunk, and the smoke continued to rise.

"I lows you should know if it's worked out, sare."

The sharp eyes seemed to go through Ralph.
"Dead sure. We am't drawn a cent's worth o' colour out o' it fer none months solid."

"Tain't worth prospectin' for the reef?"

"Can't say. I am't much when it comes to prospectin' gold. I knows the colour when I sees it."

Nick joined in the conversation at this point. "Guess you'd a notion you fanced bein' in it," he said, smiling over at the Breed.

Victor laughed a little harshly

"That's jest what."

The two brothers nodded. This they had understood.

"I'd have found all the plant fer big work," went on the trader eagerly. "I'd have found the cash to do everything. I'd have found the labour An' us three 'ud have made a great syndicate. We'd 'a' run it dead secret. Wi' me in it we could 'a' sent our gold down to the bank by the dogs, an', bein' as my shack's so far from here, no one 'ud ever 'a' found whar the yeller come from. It 'ud 'a' been a real fine game a jo-dandy game An' it's worked clear out?" he asked again, as though to make certain that he had heard aright. "Bottomed right down to the bed-rock. Maybe ye'd tike to see fer yourself?" "Guess I ken take your word, boys; ye asn't the sort to lie to a pal. I'm real sorry." He paused and shifted his position. Then he went on with a slightly cunning look. "I 'lows you're like to take a run down to Edmonton one o' these days. A feller mostly likes to make things hum when he's got a good wad." Gagnon's tone was nurely conversational. But his object must have been plain to any one else. He was bitterly resentful at the working out of the placer mine, and his anger always sent his thoughts into crooked channels. His nature was a curious one; he was honest enough, although avaricious, while his own ends were served. It was different when he was balked, "We don't notion a city any," said Nick, simply

"Things is confusin' to judge by the yarns folks tell." added Ralph, with a shake of his shappy head.

" Them fellers as comes up to your shack, Victor, mostly talks o' drunk, an' shootm', an' -- an' women." Nick went on, "Guess the hills'il do us. Maybe when we've done wi' graft an' feel that it 'ad he good to laze, likely we'll go down an' buy a homestead on the prairie. Maybe, I sez."

Nick spoke dubiously, like a man who does not convince himself. "Hah, that's 'cause you've never been to a city," said the Breed sharply,

"Test so," observed Ralph quietly, between the puffs at his pipe.

Gagnon laughed silently. His eyes were very bright and he looked from one brother to the other with appreciation. An idea had occurred to him and he was mentally probing the possibilities of carrying it out. What he saw pleased him, for he continued to smile. " Weil, well, maybe you're right," he said indulgently. Then silence fell.

Each man was rapt in his own thoughts, and talk without a definite object was foreign to at least two of the three. The brothers were waiting in their stolid Indian fashion for sleep to come. The trader was thinking hard behind his lowered eyelids, which were almost hidden by the thick smoke which rose from his pipe.

The fire burned down and was replenshed. Raph rose and gathered the pannikins and threw them into a biscuit box. Then he laid out his blankets while Nick went over and holted the door. Still the trader did not look up. When the two men had settled themselves comfortably in their blankets the other at last put his spipe away.

"No," he said, as he too negot ated his blankets, "guess we want good sound men in these hills, anyway I reckon you're en call to get visitu" the prairie, boys; you're the finest hunters I've ever known. D'ye know the name your shack here goes by among the downlinders? They call it the 'Westley Injum Reserve,'"

"White Injuns," said Nick, with a grin followed by a yawn.

"That's what," observed Victor, earling husself up in his blankets. "The frequent heard tell of the White Squaw, but White Injuns sounds like as it wa'n't jest possible. Howsturn, they call you read white book neckes, and I 'lows ther' ain't no redskin in the world to stan' beside you on the trail o' a fur."

The two men laughed at their friend's rough tribute to their attanements. Ralph was the quieter of the two, but hus appreciation was none the less. He was simple-hearted, but he knew his own worth when dealing with fura. Nick laughed loudly. It tuckled him to be considered a White Indian at the when dealing with furs Nick laughed loudly It tuckled him to be considered a White Indian at the calling which was his, for his whole pride was in his work.

Nick was not without a comantic side to his nature. The life of the mountains had imbued han with a half-isavage superstruon winch reveiled in the uncampy tope of such place. It has was not the first time he had heard of a White Squaw, and, although he did not believe such a phenomenon possible, it appealed solutionity to his love of the marvellous. Victor had turned over to sleep, but Nick was very wide awake and interested. He could not let such an opportunity sign. Victor was good at a yarn. And, bestder, Victor knew more of the mountan-love thus any one cibe. So he roused the Breed again. "You was sayn'd about a White Squaw, Victor," "You was sayn'd about a White Squaw, Victor,"

he said, in a shamefaced manner. His bronzed cheeks were deeply flushed and he glanced over at his brother to see if he were laughing at him Ralph was lying full leigth upon his blankets and his eyes were closed, so he went on. "Guess I've heerd tell of a White Squaw Say, an't it that they reckon as she am't jest a human critiur?" Victor opened his eyes and rolled over on his

Victor operato his eyes and rotted over on ass back. If there was one weathers she had it was the native half breed love of romancing. He was ever ready to yarn. He reveiled in it when he had a good audience. Nick was the very man for hun, simple, homest, superstitious. So he sat up and answered readily enough.

"That's uset how, pard. An' it sin't a varn.

neither. It's gospel truth. I know,"
"Hah!" ejaculated Nick, while a strange feeling passed down his spine. Ralph's eyes had slowly opened, but the others did not notice him.

"I've seen her!" went on the trader emphatically.

"You've seen ber!" said Nick, in an awed whisper

An extra loud burst of the storming wind held the men silent a moment, then, as it died away. Victor went on.

"Yes, I see her with my own two eyes, an' I ain't like to ferget it neither. Say, ye've seen them Bible 'Instratious' in my shanty? Them pootur's o' lovesome critturs wi' feathery wings an' sech''' "I guess."

her dead right."

"Mush! But she must be a dandy sight," exclaimed Nick, with conviction. "How come ye to — "

"Guess it's a long yarn, an' maybe ye're wantm'

"Guess it's a long yarn, an' maybe ye're wants to sleep"

"Say, I 'lows I'd like that yarn, Victor. I ain't worried for sleep, any"

Nick deliberately refi.led his pipe and lit it, and passed his tobacco to the trader. Victor took the pouch, Ralph's eyes had clored again.

"You allius was a great one fer a yarn, Nick," began the half-breed, with a laugh. "Guees you most allus gets me gastant'; but say, thus an't no yarn, in a way. It's the mest cur'es bit o' truth, as maybe you'll presently allow. But I ain't gous' to tell it you if ye ann't bellevus', 'cause ut's the truth." The trader's face fash become onlie serious and he spoke with unusual earnestness.

Nick was impressed, and Ralph's eyes had opened again.
"Git gom', pard; guess your word's good fer
"Nick said secrets." "You was earn'..."

me," Nick said eagerly. "You was sayin' - "
"Ye've heard tell o' the Moosefoot Injuns?"

"Ye've heard tell o' the Moosefoot Injuns?" began the trader slowly Nick nodded. "They're a queer lot o' neches. I used to do a deal o' trade wi' them on the Peace River, 'fore they was located on a reserve. They were the last o' the old-time redskin hunters. Dessay they were the last to hunt. the buffalo into the drives. They're pretty fine men now. I guess, as neches go, but they ain't nothin' to what they was. I guess that don't figger anyway, but they're different from most Injuns, which is what I was coming to. Their chief ain't a 'brave,' same as most, which, I 'lows, is unusual. Maybe that's how it come they ain't allus on the war-path, an' maybe that's how it come their river's called Peace River Their chief is a Med'cine Man. has been ever since they was drove across the mountains from British Columbia. They was pretty pigh wiped out when that happened, so they did away wi' havin' a 'brave' fer a chief, an' took on a 'Med'cine Man' "Wal, it ain't quite clear how it come about, but the story, which is most gener'ly believed, says that the first Med'cine Man was pertic ler cunnin', an' took real thick with the white folks' way o' doin' things. Say, he learned his folk a deal o' farmin' an' sech, an' they took to trappin' same as you understand it. There wa'n't no scrappin', nor war-nath vowlin', they jest come an' settled right down an' took on to the land. Wal, this feller, 'fore he died, got the Mission'ry on his trail, an' got religion, but he couldn't git dead clear o' his med'eine, an' he got to prophesyin'. He called all his folk together an' took out his youngest squaw She was a pretty crittur, sleek as an antelope fawn; I 'lows her pelt was nigh as smooth an' soft Her eyes were as black an' log as a moose caif's, an' her hair was as fine as black for fur. Wal, he un on' snoke to them folk, an' said as ther' was a White Squaw comm' amongst 'em who was goin' to make 'em a great people, who was gom' to lead 'em to victory agin their old enemies in British Columbia, where they'd go back to an' live in peace. An' he told 'em as this squaw was goin' to be the instrument by which the comin' of the White Squaw was to happen. Then they danced a Med'cine Dance about her, an' he made med'cine for three days wi'out stoppin' Then they built her a lodge o' teepees in the heart o' the forest, where she was to Lve by herself.

"Wal, ume went on an't the squaw give borth to a daugiture, but she wa'n't jest white, so the men took and kilded her. I guess. Then came another; she was whater than the first, but she dan't jest please the folk, an't bey kildel her too. Then came another, an' another, each child whater than the last, an' they were all killed, 'cause I guess they wa'n't jest whate. Till the seventh come along

30

The seventh was the White Squaw Say, fair as a pictur, wi' black hair that shone in the sun, an' wi' eyes that blue as 'ud shame the summer sky."

The half-breed paused, and sat staring with introspective gaze at the iron side of the stove. Nick was gazing at him all eyes and ears for the story Ralph, too, was sitting up now

"Wal, she was taken care of an' treated like the queen she was. On'v the headman was allowed to look at her. She grew an' grew, an' all the tribe was thinkin' of war, an' gettin' ready. They made 'brayes' nigh every week, an' their Sun Dances was the greatest ever known. They danced Ghost Dances, too, to keep away Evil Spirits, I mess, an' things was goin' real good. Then sudden comes the white folk, an' after a bit they was all herded on to a Reserve an' kep' there. But that White Squaw never left her home in the forest, 'cause no one but the headman knew where she was. She was on'v a young girl then: I guess she's grown now. Wal, fer years them pore critturs reckoned on her comin' along an' leadm' them out on the war-path. But she didn't come; she jest stayed right along with her mother in that forest, an' didn't hudge "That's the yarn as it stan's," Victor went on, after another pause, "but this is how I come to WHICH TELLS OF THE WHITE SQUAW 31

see her It was winter, an' I was tradin' on the Reserve there. It was a fine cold day, on' the snow was good an' hard, an' I set out to hunt an old bull moose that was runnin' with its mates in the location. I took two neches with me, an' we had a slap-up time fer nigh on to a week. We hunted them moose hard the whole time, but never came up wi' 'em. Then it came on to storm, an' we pitched camp in a thick pine forest. We was there fer mgh on three days while it stormed a'mighty hard. Then it cleared an' we set out, an', wi'in fifty yards o' our came, we struck the trail of the moose. We went red-hot after them beasts, I'm figgerin', an' they took us into the thick o' the forest Then we got a couple o' shots in . my slugs got home, but, fer awhiles, we lost them critturs. Next day we set out again, an' at noon we was startled by hearin' a shot fired by som'un else. We ken' right on, an' himely we came to a clearm' There we saw four teepees an' a shack o' pine logs all smeared wi' colour; but what came nigh to par'lyzin' me was the sight o' my moose lym' all o' a heap on the ground, an', standin' beside its carcass, leanin' on a long muzzle-loader, was a white woman. She was wearin' the blanket right enough, but she was as white as you are Say, she had six great huskies wi' her, an' four women. An' when they see us they put hard into the woods. I was fer goin' to have a look at the terpees, but my neches wouldn't let me. They told me the lodge was sacred to the White Squaw, who we'd jest seen. An' I 'lows, they neches wa'n't jest easy till we cleared them woods."

"An' she was beautiful, an' - an' fine?" asked Nick as the trader ceased speaking. "Was she that beautiful as you'd heerd tell of?"

His voice was eager with suppressed excitement His pipe had gone out, and he had forgotten every thing but the story the Breed had told

"Ay, that she was, her skin was as clear as the snow she trod on, an' her eyes gee! but I've never seen the like. Man, she was wonderful."

Victor threw up his hands in a sort of ecstasy and looked up at the creaking roof.

"An' her hair?" asked Nick, wonderingly

"A black fox pelt was white aside it."

"An' didn't ye foller her?"

The question came abruptly from Ralph, whom the others had forgotten,

"I didn't jest know you was awake," said Victor "Wal, no, to own the truth, I 'lows I was scart to death wi' what them neches said. Maybe I wa'n't sorry to light out o' them woods." They talked on for a few moments longer, then

WINTER TRAILS OF THE WHITE SQUAMP 33

Raiph's stertorous breathing told of sleep. Victor was not long in following his example. Nick sat smoking thoughtfully for some tune; presently he rose and put out the lamp and stoked up the fire.
Then he, too, rolled over in his blankets, and, thinking of the beautiful White Squaw, dropped off to sleep to conline his meditations in dreamland.

CHAPTER III.

THE OUEST OF THE WHITE SOUAW

Critizmas had gone by and the new year was tenang the end of its frist month. It was many weeks since Vector Gagmen had come to the Westley's degate on that storney evening. But has wast had not been forgotten. The story of the White Squaw had made an unpresson upon Nyket speh as the half breed could never lawe anticipated. Right and thought much of it too, but, left to himstelf, he would probably have forgotten it, or, at most, had nearely enomined at a size of year.

But this he was not allowed to do. Nick was erthusastic. The romance of the mountains was in his blood, and that blood was glowing with the primest life of man. The fire of youth bad never been starred within him, but it was there, as surely as it is in every human creature. Both men were nearing forty years of age, and, beyond the associations of the trader's place, they had never mixed with thrie fellows. The forem of fits beautiful White Squaw had come to Next and, in the solution of the forest, on the more bound wild, it ensured with line, a vasion of such up you he had never before decarmed. The name of "woman" held for him suggestions of unknown delights, and the word autroundings with which Victor had enveloped the lovely create made the White Squaw a vision so alluring that his unmarked brain was muspable of shutting it out.

And thus it was, as he glided, gliost-like, through the forests or scaled the snowy craps in the course of his daily work, the memory of the mysterious creature remained with him. He thought of her as he set his trans; he thought of her, as, hard on the trail of moose, or deer, or wolf, or bear, he scoured the valleys and hills, in the shadow of the trees at twikight, in fancy he saw her lurking: even amidst the black, barren tree-trunks down by the river banks. His eyes and ears were ever afert with the half-dread expectation of seeing her or hearing her voice. The scene Victor had described of the white huntress learning upon her rifle was the most vivid in his imagination, and he told him self that some day, in the chances of the chase, she might visit his valleys, his hills At might he would talk of her to his brother, and together they would chum the matter over, and slowly, in the more phlegmatic Ralph, Nick kindled the flame with which he nunself was consumed.

·

And so the days wore on, a fresh zest was added to their too. Each morning Ralph would set out with a vague but pleasurable anticipation of adventure. And as his mind succumbed to the strange influence of the White Squaw, it coloured for him what had been the commonplace events of his daily life. If a buck was started and rushed crashing through the forest growths, he would pause ere he raised his rifle to assure himself that it was not a woman, garbed in the parti-coloured blanket of the Monsefort Indians, and with a face cadant as an angel's. His slow-moving imagination was deeply sturred.

From the Beginning Nature has spoken in no uncertain language. "Man shall not live alone." she says. Victor Gagnon had roused these two simple creatures. There was a woman in the world. other than the mother they had known, and they began to wonder why the mountains should be peopled only by the forest beasts and solitary man. As February came the time dragged more heavily than these men had ever known it to drag before They no longer sat and talked of the White Squaw. and speculated as to her identity, and the phenomenon of her barth, and her mussion with regard to her tribe. Somehow the outspoken enthusiasm of Nick had subsided mito sitent brooding, and Ralph needed no longer the encouragement of his younger bottler to urge him to think of the strange when the tribe of the strange when the tribe and of the strange with creature. Each had taken the subject to himself, and nursed and fostered it in his own way

The time was approaching for their visit to Gagron's store. This was the reason of the dragging days. Both men were eager for the visit, and the cause of their eagerness was not far to seek. They wished to see the half-breed and feed their passion on fresh words of the lovely creature who had so strangely possessed their ,magnations.

They did not neglect the methodical roome of their duties. When might caced in Nois saw to the degrs. The great insinces cleayed only one master who fed them, who careff or them, who fouged them on the trail with club and who, and that was Nick Raigh they howeve the Gooded. He was the domestic of the abode, for he was of a was the domestic of the abode, for he was of a of web work. Nick was too large and heavy in his mode of life to season a stew. But in the traprier cart is a probable that he was the better min per's craft it is probable that he was the better man.

The brothers' nights were passed in long, Indianlike silence which ended in siece. Tobacco scented the atmosphere of the hut with a heaviness that was depressing Each man sat upon his blankets afternating between his pannikin of coffee and his pipe, with eyes lowered in deep thought, or turned upon the glowing stove in earnest, unseeing contemplafrom.

The night before the appointed day for starting came round. To-morrow they would be swinging along over the snowy earth with their dogs haulany their laden sled. The morrow would see them on their way to Little Choveuse Creek, on the bank of which stood Victor Gagnon's store.

There was an atmosphere of suppressed excite ment in the doings of that night. There was much to be done, and the unusual activity almost seemed a bustle in so quiet an abode. Outside the door the sled stood piled with the furs which represented their winter's catch. The dog harness was spread out, and all was in readiness. Inside the hut the two men were packing away the stuff they must leave behind. Although there was no fear of their home being invaded it was their custom to take certain precautions. In that hut were all their savings, to lose which would mean to lose the fruits of their life's labours.

Nick had just moved a chest from the depths of the patchwork cupboard in which they kept their food. It was a small receptacle hewn out of a solid pine log. The lid was attached with heavy rawhide hinges, and was secured by an iron hasp held by a chunsy looking padlock. He set it down upon his bankets.

"Wer'll we put this?" he asked abruptly Raiph looked at it with his thoughtful eyes.

"It needs considerin'," he observed. And he leant himself against a heavy table which stood by

"We am't opened it since last fall," said Nick presently, after a long and steady survey of the object of their solicitude.

"No."

"Ther's a deal in it."

the wall

Ralph groped at the neck of his shirt. Nick watched his brother's movements.

" Maybe we'll figure it up agin."

Ralph fell in with his brother's suggestion and drew out the key which was secured round his neck. He unlocked the rusty padlock and threw open the lid. The chest contained six small bags filled to bursting point and securely tued with rashvide, or bags half-full and open, and a thick packet of Bank of Montreal blir.

Nick knelt down and took out the bills and set them on one side.

"Ther's fi' thousand dollars ther'," he said. "I 'lows they've been reckoned careful." Then he picked up one of the bags and held it up for his brother's inspection. "We ned them seven bags up all weighin' equal, but we am't jest sure how much dust they hold. Seven," he went on reflectively, "ther's on'y six an' a haf now, since them woodbogs got at 'em. 'fore we made this chest. I 'lows Victor's 'cute to locate the dust in them furs. It wa'n't a good ayout wrappin' the bags in black fox pelts. Howsum, I'd like to know the value o' them bags. Weighs migh on to three poun', I'm guessin'." Ralph took the bag and weighed it in his hand. "More," he said. "Ther's fi' poun' o' weight ther"." "Guess them bags together means fifteen to twenty thousan' dollars, sure," said Nick, his eyes shining at the thought. "I don't rightly know," said Raiph, "It's a goodish wad. I 'lows."

Nick returned the store to the chest which Ralph relacked "Where?" asked Nick, glancing round the hut

in search of a secure hiding-place.

"We'll dig a hole in the floor under my blankets," said Ralph after a pause. "Maybe it'll be tol'ble safe there"

And for greater security the chest was so disposed. The work was quickly done, and the clay floor, with the aid of water, was smeared into its usual smooth appearance again. Then the brothers sought their rest.

At daybreak came the start. Nick harnessed the dogs, five great husines who lived in the shelter of a rough shed outside the hut when it stormed, and curled themselves up in the snow, or prowled, baying the moon, when the might was fine. Fiercelooking brutes these with their long, keen muzzles, their high shoulders and deep chests, their drooping quarters which were massed with muscle right down to the higher sinews of their great feet. Their ferocity was chiefly the animal antagonism for their kind, with Nick they were easy enough to handle, for all had been well broken beneath the heavy lash which the man knew better than to spare.

While the dogs were being hatched into their places Ralph secured the door of the dugout. There were no half measures here. The door was nailed un securely, and a harrier of logs set before it. Then, when all was ready, the men took their poles and Nick broke out the frost-bound runners of the sled. At the maric word "Mush!" the dogs sprang at their breast-draws, and the sled glided away down the slope with Nick running beside it, and Ralph following close behind

Down they dropped mot the depths of the asher valley, Nike quading his dogs by word of mouth alone. The lead dog, an especially vilot-empered history, needed nothing but the divergeated "Gee" and "18w" where no packed path was, and when anything approximage trait has services Nick issued no commends. These creatures of the wild knew their words, lowed it, howd for it, as all who have seen them labouring over snow and see must understand.

By the rotte they most take it was one hundred miles to Little Ghopeuse Creel. On thoused miles of montains and forest, one hundred miles of montains and forest, one hundred miles of plomy siltence, one hundred miles of vergen mow, so cit to the feet of the labouring dogs, gaving them no footholds but the iskeer anchorage of half-burned legs. It was a temper-trying joinney for man and best. The dogs anapped at each other's heeks, but these meaning the continues of the continues

Skirting the forests wherever possible, and following the break of the mammoth pine-trees when no bald opening was to hand they sped along. The THE QUEST OF THE WHITE SQUAW dogs hauled at the easy running sled, while, with long, gliding strides, the two men kept pace with them. The hills were faced by the sturdy does with the ealm persistence of creatures who know their own indomitable nowers of endurance, while the descents were made with a speed which was governed by the incessant use of Nick's pole. The evening camp was pitched in the shelter of the forest. The dogs fed voraciously and well on their raw fish, for the journey was short and provisions plentiful. The two men fared in their usual plain way They slept in their fur lined bags while the wolfish burden-bearers of the North first prowled, argued out their private quarrels, sang in charits as the northern lights moved fautastically in the sky, and finally curled themselves in their several spow-hurrows The camp was struck at daylight next morning and the journey resumed. The dows raced fresh and strong after their rest, and the miles were devoured with greedy haste. The white valleys wound in a mazy tangle round the foot of tremendous hills, but never a mistake in direction was made by the driver, Nick. To him the trail was as plain as though every foot of it were marked by well-packed snow; every landmark was anticipated, every inch of that chaotic land was an onen book. A "Gee." or a sudden "Haw" and a fresh basin of magnificent primeval forest would open before the travellers. And so the unending ocean of mountain rollers and forest troughs continued. No variation, save from the dead white of the open snowfields to the heavy shadows of the forest. Always the strange, mystic grey twikght, the dazzling sparkle of glinting snow, the biting air which stung the flesh like the sear of a red-hot tron; the steady run of dogs and men. On, on, with no thought of time to harass the mind, only the destination to think of And when they came to Little Choveuse Creek they were welcomed in person by Victor Gagnon. He awasted them at his threshold. The clumsy stockade of lateral pine logs, a relic of the old Indran days when it was necessary for every fur store been used to bank the stoves with to be a fortress, was now a wreck. A few upright posts were standing, but the rest had long since The afternoon was spent in barter, and the time was one of beaming good nature, for Victor was a shrewd dealer, and the two brothers had little real estimate of the value of money. They sold their pelts in sets, resyntless of quality. And when the last was traded, and Vector had parted the value in stores and cash, there came a strong feeling of day It was the custom on the occasion of these visits to make merry in a temperate way. Victor was never averse to such doings for there was French blood in his veins. He could sing a song, and most of his ditties were either of the old days of the Red River Valley, or dealt with the early settlers round the Citadel of Ouebec Amongst the accomplishments which he possessed was that of scraping out woful strains upon an ancient fiddle. In this land, where life was always serious, he was a right jovial companion for such men as Nick and Ralph, and the merry evenings in his company at the store were well thought of. When might closed down, and supper was finished, and the untidy hyme-room which backed the store was cleared by the half-breed, the business of the evening's entertainment began. The first thing in Victor's idea of hospitality was a "brew" of hot drink. He would have called it "puncla." but the name was impossible. It was a decoction of vamilta essence, spiced up, and flavoured in a manner which, he claimed, only he understood, The result was stimulating, slightly nauseating, but sufficiently unusual to be enticing to those who lived the soher life of the mountain wild. He would have battored good run or whidey upon these commides of hus only hus size of these selective beerenges had long sace given out, and was not likely to be replanated until the breaking of spring. The variety of strong drink which falls to the lot of such men as he is centraried. Hu days of "panlaller," which he stocked for trade, had not yet one round. The suceness were not yet finished. Pan-shifter would come next, after that, if need to, would came histants of red nick. He had even, hacco and datafling the liquor. But these last two were only used is carbenia.

44

The three men sat round and sipped the steaming liquor, the two brothers vying with each other in their praises of Victor's skill in the "brew"

The first glass was drusk with much appreciation. Over the second came a dislying. Nick, experiencing the influence of the spirit, asked for a tune on the fiddle. Victor responded with alserity and waited out an old half-leved melody, a discontinuous control of the spirit of the second duced, neverthelias, an enlivering effect upon Eslph, who asked for another. Then Victor sang, in a thin tenory vice, the twenty and old versus of a song called. The Rel River Valley;" the last lines of the refran were always the same and waited out mournfully upon the dense atmosphere of the room. " So remember the Red River Valley

And the half-breed that loved you so true. "

But, even so, there was something perfectly in keeping between the recreation of these men and the wild, uncouth life they led. The long, grey winter and the brief, fleeting summer, the desolate wastes and dreary isolation.

After awhile the sum of Victor's entertainment was worked out and they fell back on mere talk. But as the notent spirit worked, the conversation became fouder than usual, and Victor did not monopolize st. The two brothers did their share, and each, unknown to the other, was seeking an opportunity of turning Victor's thoughts into the channel where dwelt his recollections of the wonderful White Squaw.

Nick was the one who broke the ice. The more slow-going Ralph had not taken so much spirit as his brother. Nick's eyes were bright, almost burn ing, as he turned his flushed, rugged face upon the half-breed. He leant forward in his eagerness and his words came ransdly, almost fiercely

"Say, Victor," he jerked out, as though he had screwed himself up for the necessary courage to speak on the subject. "I was thinkin' o' that white 48 IN THE RECODING WILD crittur you got yarnin' about when you come around our shanty Jest whar's that Moosefoot Reserve, an' - an' the bit o' forest whar her lodge is located? Maybe I'd fancy to know. I 'lows I was kind o' struck on that yarn."

The trader saw the easter face, and the excitement in the eyes which looked into his, and, in a moment, his merry mood died out. His dark face became serious, and his keen black eyes looked sharply back into Nick's expressive countenance. He answered at once in characteristic fashion

"The Reserve's nigh on to a hund'ed an' fifty miles from here, I guess. Lies away ther' to the nor'east, down in the Foothills. The bluff lies beyond." Then he paused and a flash of thought shot through his active brain. There was a strange something looking out of Nick's eyes which he enterpreted aright. Insuration leapt, and be grupped it, and held it,

"Say," he went on, "you ain't thinkin' o' makin' the Reserve. Nick?" Then he turned swiftly and looked at Ralph. The quieter man was pazing beavily at his brother. And as Victor turned back again to Nick his heart beat faster

Nick lowered his eyes when he found himself the object of the double scrutmy. He felt as though he would like to have withdrawn his questions, and he shifted uneasily But Victor waited for his answer and he was forced to go on.

"Oh," he said, with a shamefaced laugh, "I was on'y jest thinkin' I 'lows that yarn was a real good one."

There was a brief silence while swift thought was passing behind Victor's dark face. Then slowly and even solemnly, came words which gripped the hearts of his two guests.

'It wa'n't no yarn. I see that White Squaw wi' my own two eyes."

Nick started to his feet. The "punch" had fired him almost beyond control. His face worked with nervous twitchings. He raised one hand up and swong it forcefully down as though delivering a blow

"By Gar!" he cried, "then I go an' find her; I go an' see for myself."

And as he spoke a strange expression looked out of Victor's eves.

Ralph removed his pipe from his lips.

"Good, Nick," he said emphatically. "The dogs are fresh. Guess a long traif'll do 'em a deal o' good. When'il we start?"

Nick looked across at his brother. He was doubtful if he had heard aright. He had expected strong opposition from the quiet, steady-going Ralph.

50 IN THE BROODING WILD

But, instead, the older man gave unhenitating approval. Just for one instant there came a strange feelung in his heart; a slight doubt, a semation of disappointment, something foreign to his nature and unaccountable, something which took all pleasure from the thought of his brother's company. It was quite a fleeting senation, however, for the next moment it was goor, his honest nature rose supzor to any such jeafusury and he strode across the coon and grupped Ralph's hand.

"Say, we'll start at daylight, bothler. Just you an' me," he blurted out, m be fulness of hu large heart "We'll houst that white criture out, we'll send ther out like Injun medicase men, an' we'll treat her burg her buck with a. Say, Ralph, we'll treat her work of the send to be send to we in not ner, sinte Snike again, brother "tiesy were month of the state of "Snike, we warming each other forcefully by the hand "Snike, with the state of the st ning was working within him, and the half-breed cunning is rarely clean.

And so the night ended to everybody's satisfaction. Ralph was even more quiet than usual. Vic-

tion. Ralph was even more quuet than usual. Victor Gagnon felt that the stars were working in his best interests, and he blessed the lucky and innocent thought that had suggested to him the yarn of the White Squaw. As for Nick, his delight was bosterous and uncertrained. He revelled openly in the prospect of the morrow's journey.

Nor had broad daylight power to shake the purpose of the might. Too long had the trappers broaded upon the story of the White Squaw Victor knew his men so well too, while they breakfasted he used every effort to encourage them. He literally herded them on by dint of added detail and well timed prisse of the woman's beauty.

And after the meal the slid was preseared. Vic-

And after the meal the sled was prepared. Victor was chef advisor. He made them take a supply of essences and "trade". He told them of the disposition of Man-of-the-Snow-Hill, the Moosefoot cheft, assuring them be would sell his sool for strong drink. No encouragement was left ungreen, and, well before noon, the dogs stood ready in the traces.

traces.

A hearty farewell, then out upon the white trail

Nick strung the willing beasts, and the flurry of Joose surface-mow that few in their wake hid dhe saled as the trial gided away to the far northeast. Victor stood watching the receding figures till the his of the runners died down in the datance, and the driving voice of Nick became lost in the grey solitude. The northern trail held them and the felt safe. He moved out upon the trampled senow, and, sanang round to the hash of the store, disappeared within the pine wood which backed away on the sale of the volce.

Later he came to where three huts were hidden away amongst the vast tree-trunks. They were so placed, and so disguised, as to be almost hidden until the wanderer chanced right upon them. These habstations were a part of Victor's secret life There was a strange mushroom look about them, low walls of muck-daubed logs supported wide-stretching roofs of reeds, which, in their turn, supported a thick covering of soot-begrimed snow. He paused near by and uttered a low call, and presently a tail garl emerged from one of the doors. She walked slowly toward him with proud, erect carriage, while at her heels followed two fierce husky does, moving with all the large dignity of honoured guards. The woman was taller than the trader. and her beauty of figure was in no wise hidden by the blanket clothing she wore. They talked earnestly together for some time, and then, in answer to a further summons from Victor, they were ioined by a tall, gaunt man, with the solemn cast of face of an Indian, and a pair of eyes as darkly brooding as those of a moose. Although he was very dark-skinned he was plainly of the bastard race of his companions, and a certain resemblance between hunself and the woman spoke of relation ship The three talked long and senously, and finally Victor returned alone to the store. Again he took up his stand in the doorway and remained gazing out upon the valley of the Little Choyeuse Creek, and the more distant crags of the foot-hills beyond His face was serious, serious even for the wild, where all levity seems out of place, and laughter sars upon the solemnity of the life and death struggle for existence which is for ever being fought out there. On his brow was a pucker of deep thought, whilst his eyes shone with a look which seemed to have gathered from his surroundings much of the cunning which belongs to the creatures of the forest His usual expression of good-fellowship had passed, and in its place appeared a hungry, avaricious look which, although always there, was generally hidden behind a superficial geniality. Victor had hitherto lived fairly honestly because there

54 M THE BRODING WILD. was little or no temptation to do otherwise where his trading-post was stationed. But it was not his nature to do so. And as he stood gazing out upon the negged jeture before him he lonew he was quite unobserved, and so the rough soul within him was laid hare to the groy light of the world.

CHAPTER IV.

THE HOGDED MAN

THE mere suggestion of the possibility of a woman's presence had rudely broken up the even calm of Ralph and Nick Westley's lives. To turn back to the peace of their mountain home without an effort to discover so fair and strange a creature as this White Squaw would have been impossible.

These men had frozown no real youth. They had togget the battle of the from the earliest childhood, they had fived hives as dispassionate and cold as the glueres of their mountain home. Recreation was almost unknown to them. Toll, unremitting, art dough, had been ther lot. Thus Native had been defield, and now the was coming bazle on them as mentably as the sum frest and ests, and the seasons come and go. They failted to realize their dauger; they had no understanding of the passions that moved them, and so they harried headling upon the trail that was to lead them they force not the trail that was to lead them they force to whither, but which was shadowed by disaster every foot of the way To them temptation was irresistible for they had never known the teaching of restraint. it was the passionate rending of the bonds which had all too long stifled their youth

Even the does realized the change in their masters. Nick's lash fell heavily and frequently, and the hardy brutes, who loved the toil of the trace, and the incessant song of the trailing sled, fell to wondering at the change, and the pace they were called upon to make. It was not their nature to complain. their pride was the stubborn, unbending pride of savage power, and their reply to the wealing thong was always the reply their driver sought. Faster and faster they journeyed as the uncooling ardour of their master's spirits rose. The snow lay thick and heavy, and every inch of the wild, unmeasured trail had to be broken. The Northland grants thronged about them, glustening in their impenetrable armour and crested by the silvery burnish of their glacial headpieces. They frowned vastly, yet with a sublime contempt, at the puny intrusion of their solitude. But the fiery spirit impelling the brothers was a power which defied the overwhelming grandeur of the mountain world, and rendered insignificant the trials they encountered. The ery was "On1" and the does laboured as only these burden-bearers of the North can labour.

57

The dark day repened; and, as the dull sun crept cut from bahind the grammer, and remailed the

The dark day ripered; and, as the dull sun crept out from behind the greenes, and revealed the frost in the air, the temperature dropped lower and lower. And the animal world people furtively out upon the strange sight of creatures like themselves to ling at the command of beings whose wores had not even the power to smite the mountainsides with boastful defance as theirs were wont to do. Then the daviolation was and the significant of the con-

its greyness as the might shades rose, and a bitter breeze shuddered through the woods and along the valleys. The sounds of the forest rose in mourtful cadence, and, as the profundity of the mountain might settled heavily upon the world, the number-wolf, the outless of the region, moved alroad, lifeing his worce in a cry half-mournful, half-exultant.

ing his voice in a cry half-incontrol, half-cultant. Camp was pitched well clear of the forest and a large fire loudled, and the savage night-providers draw for firm of the woodland shadows. The sense proceeded silently with their woodland shadows. The sense propared their own food, and soon a savoury adour tickled the nostrist of those keyead the circle of the first process of the control of the control of the control of the control of the circle of the control of t full benefit of his portion. It was a strange sight for the furtive eyes that looked on, and a tantahring one, but they dared not draw near, for the fire threatened them, and, besides, they possessed a keen instinct of caution.

After supper the men rested in spells, one always string up by the five whist the other slept in the comfort of his fur-lined "Arctic bag". And presently the blackness about lightened, and the dark shadows prowing became visible to the eyes of the sentry. The moon had riene, but was still be somewhere behind the great mountains. Its light had effect, that was all. I and as the minth work.

down over the fire smoking, every now and then passing to thaw the incotine in the stem of his pipe. But his eyes seemed to be watching in every direction at once. Nor was the vaguest shadow but to their quack flashing glances.

The dogs, sleeping in their snow-burrows, rested their muscles, dreaming passically of happy hunting-grounds. Their safety was assured under the

the shadows grew bolder and their presence kept the sentry ever on the alert. For the most part he sat still, swathed to the eves in his furs: he huddled ing-grounds. Their safety was assured under the watchful eyes of their masters; the forest world had o terrors for them. Towards dawn Nick was on the watch. The aspect of the night had quite changed. The moon, large, full, brilliant, was directly overhead, and the stars, like magnificent dewdrops, hung righly in the sky. Away to the north, just clear of a stretch of heaven high peaks, the scintillating shafts of the northern lights shuddered convulsively, like skeleton arms outstretched to grasp the rich gems which hung just beyond their reach. The moving shadows had changed to material forms. Lank, gaunt, hungry-looking beasts crowded just beyond the fire-ht circle, shaggy-coated creatures, with manes a-bristle and baleful eyes which gazed angrily upon the camp.

50

Nack saw all these could have counted there so watchful was he. The wolves were of small account. but there were other creatures which needed his most vigilant attention. Twice in the night he had seen two green-glowing eyes staring down upon him from among the branches of one of the trees on the edge of the forest. He knew those eyes, as who of his calling would not; a puma was crouching along the wide-spreading bough.

He stealthily drew his oun towards him. He was in the act of raising it to his shoulder when the eves were abruptly withdrawn. The time passed on. He knew that the pums had not departed, and he waited, ready. The eyes reappeared. Up leapt the human manner. In size the newcomer dwarfed the trapper, it came slowly with a shuffling gait. Sud-

self and the other He took a long and deadly aim. The glowing eyes offered a splendid target and he knew he must not miss. A report rang out, followed almost instantaneously by a pitcous, halfhuman shriek of pain, then came the sound of a body falling, and the eyes had vanished. After firmg Nick swung round to the figure beyond the fire. It loomed vast in the yellow light and was reared to its full height not ten yards away. A low, snarking growl came from it, and the sound was dreadful in its suppressed ferocity. Raiph was now sitting up gazing at the oncoming brute, - a magrufe, but ere his hand had compressed the trigger a sound from behind arrested him. His head turned instantly, and, gazing through the light, drifting fire smoke, he beheld the outline of a monstrous figure bearing down upon the camp in an almost all hazards he must settle the nums first. He rouse him, then he changed his mind and swung round upon the puma, leaving the fire between him-glanced at the sleeping Ralph. He was about to denly it dropped to all fours and came on quicker Nick hesitated only for a second. His mouth set firmly and his brows contracted. He knew that at from the fire, and dashed out to meet the intruder.

60

IN THE EROODING WILD

It was a strange and impressive sight, this en-

It was a strange and impressive sight, thus error counter of man and beast. But Nick, with his wide experience, was master of the situation. He boldly went up to within two yards of his savage and fearless foe and dashed the burning brand into the creature's face. Down dropped the gruzyly upon all fours again, and, with a roar of pain and terror, ambled hastily away into the forest;

"B'ar " questioned Ralph, from the shelter of his fur bag

"Yes --an' puma," replied Nick unconcernedly, as he returned to his seat to await the coming of morning

And so the long night passed, and the slow day broke over the blesk, pittless world. The dops awdee, and clambered from their warm, snowy couches. The coutine of the "long trail" obtained, and once more the song of the sled rang out at the heels of the eager beasts.

Nor was the short day and long weary night in such a region without effect upon the men. A feeling of superstitions uneasiness selead upon Nick-He said nothing, he was possibly too ashamed of it to do so, but the dread steadily grew, and no effort of his seemed to have power to dispel it. As he moved along beside his does he would shoot swift. fearful glances at the heights above, or back over the trail, or on ahead to some deep, dark gorge they might be approaching. He grew irritable. The darkness of the woods would sometimes hold his attention for hours, while the expression of his eves would tell of the strange thoughts passing behind them. And Ralph, though more unemotional than his brother, was scarcely less affected. It was starthing in such men, yet was it hardly to be wondered at in so overpowering a waste. It was still the morning of the second day

Nick's whip had been silent for a long time. His eyes were gazing out afar. Sometimes up at the lowering sky, where the peaks were lost in a sea. of dark cloud, sometimes down, with a brooding fire, into the forest depths. Ralph had observed the change in his brother and sympathy prompted him to draw up alongside him. "What's ailin' ve?" he asked

Nick shook his head; he could not say that anything ailed him.

"Thought, maybe ther' was somethin' amiss," went on his brother half-apologetically. He felt hymself that he must talk

Then Nick was seized with a desire to confide in the only lifelong friend he had ever known.

"Ther' ain't nothin' amiss, zac'ly," he said.
And he got no farther.
"Hab!"

"Hah!"
Ralph looked round sharply. It seemed as if something were stirring about him. He waited expectantly There was nothing unusual in sight. A wild panorama of snowy grandeur, mountain and valley and wood, that was all. They trapsed on m stence, but now they journeyed sade by side. Both men were strangely moved. Both had heard of the "Dread of the Whid," but key would have scoffed at the idea of its assaining them. But the haunting clong, and at each step they felt that the next might be the signal for a tenung spirit life to suddenly break up the dreasful calm.

They pasted a hollow where the more was ounsailly deep and soft. The deep likowerd wearly. They reached the rung end of it, and toled up the sharp assent. The top was already in sight and a fresh vista of the merementable peaks broke up there wire. Without apparent reason. Nick suddenly drew up said a sharp exclanation broke from hom. The deep lay down in the traces, and both more than the state of the sharp exclanation broke from them. The deep lay down in the traces, and both more than the sharp exclanation broke from them. In the sharp the sharp exclanation broke from them. In the sharp exclanation that t

Ralph followed the direction of the outstretched arm. And as he looked he held his breath, for something seemed to grip his throat Then a moment later words, sounding hourse and staffed, came from the depths of his storm-collar-

"Who -- who is it?"

64

Nick did not answer. Both were starring out across the hollow at the tail motionless figure of a man, and their eyes were filled with an expression of panful awe. The figure was appressively distipet, silhouetted as it was against a barren, snowclad cray They might have been earing at a statue, so still the figure stood. It was enveloped in fur, so far as the watchers could tell, but what ampressed them most was the strange bood which covered the head. The figure was too distant for them to have distinguished the features of the face bad they been visible, but, as it was, they were lost within the folds of the grey hood

There came an ominous chek from behind. Ralph turned suddenly and seized his brother's arm as he was in the act of raising his rifle to his shoulder The gun was lowered, and the intense face of Nick scowled at the author of the interruption.

"It's - it am't a human crittur." he saul hoarsely.

"It's a man," retorted Ralph, without releasing his hold.

And the two brothers became silent They stood watching for a long time, Neither spoke again, they had nothing to say Their thoughts occupied them with strange apprehension while the dogs sprawled in the snow in the spiritless manner of their kind when the labour of the traces is not demanded of them. The figure on the hil, stood quite still. The silence of the wild was profound. No wind styred to relieve it, and even under their warm furs the two men watching shivered as with cold At last the movement they had awaited came.

The Hooded Man turned towards them. One long arm was raised and he pointed away at a tall hill Then his arm moved, and he seemed to be pointing out certain landmarks for his own herefit Again, on a sudden as he fronted the direction where the brothers stood, he dropped his arm, and, a moment later, disappeared on the other side of the hill. The two men remained gazing out across the hollow for some while longer, but as the Hooded Man did not return they turned back to their does and contunued their journey.

Nick shook his head in a dissatisfied manner,

Ralph said nothing for awfule. He was beginning

The dogs leapt at their breast-draws and the sled moved forward. The two men ran side by side. When Nick at length spoke it was to resterate his fears.

"Ther' wa'n't no face showed," he said abruptly.
"No," replied Ralph. Then he added thoughtfully. "He hadn't no dogs, neither."

"He was alone, seemly Ther' wa'n't no camp outfit."

Ralph shook his head and brushed away the fee about his mouth with the back of his beaver mitt.

There was a painful atmosphere of disquiet about the two men. Their backward glances spoke far loader than words. Had their mission been in the nature of their ordinary calling they would possibly have felt nothing but earliestly, and their cumosity would have led them to investigate further, but as it was, all their inclinations tended in the opposite direction. "The Dread of the Wild" had come in them.

When they camped at midday things were no better. They had seen nothing more to disturb them, but the thoughts of both had turned upon the night, so long and drear, which was to come; and the "dread" grew stronger. After the noon meal Nick harmessed the dogs while Ralph stowed the chattels. They were on a hillade overclooming a wire valley of unbrokes; forest. All was ready for a start and Nick gave a wide, comprehensive glance around. The magic word "Mitsh," which would send the dogs headling at their breast harmes, howered on his lips, but ere he gave it utterance it changed into an elamination of horse reads and the contraction of the contraction of the contraction of horse reads and his contraction of his contraction of

"By Gar!" Then after a thrilling pause, "The Hood!"

Ralph, standing ready to break the sled out, turned

"Hev!" he ejaculated; and horror was in his tone, too.

There, in the hazy distance, more than three miles away, was the dim figure of the Hooded Man away, was the clim ngure of the Hooded Man racing over the snow. His course lay on the far side of the valley and he was to the rear of them. Nick turned back to the does, the command

"Mush!" rang out with biting emphasis, and the dogs and men, as though both were animated by the same overwhelming fear, raced down the virgin trail. Their pace was a headlong flight.

Night came, and they camped in the open. The night was blacker, and longer, more weary and shadowy than the first, by reason of the "dread" which had now become the "Dread of the Hooded Man." Even thoughts of the White Squaw took a secondary place in the minds of the brothers, for, at every turn, they felt that their steps were dogged by that other strange creature of the wild When morning came they knew, without looking, that somewhere, coldly surveying their camp, the greyhooded figure would be watching and waiting for them to move on. And sure enough, as the eager eyes looked out over the snow and forest, the gram. silent figure was there, watching, watching; but no nearer to them.

That might they came to the Moosefoot Reserve. and both men experienced such pervous relief as they had never before known. They camped within sight of the Indian teepees and log buts, but they waited for morning before they approached the chief

Over their fire they discussed their plans with seriousness. Neither of them could speak the Moosefoot language, but they could talk both Stoux and Cree, and they did not doubt but there would he interpreters about the chief.

"We'll see him first thing, I guess," said the eager Nick "Guess them two black foxes'll fix him good. He'll git a goodish bit o' trade for 'em." "An' we'll promise him powder, an' slugs, an' essences," said the cautious Ralph. "We'll get his yarn first an' pay after," he added, as he sipped his coffee.

Nick nodded.

" We'll fin' that crittur, sure," he said.

And he sat gazing upon the pictures his mind conjured up as he watched the flaming logs. In every tongue of flame he beheld the glowing face Victor had told them of, and, as the smoke rolled up into the black vault of night, he seemed to see the clustve form of the White Squaw floating in its midst. Ralph's slower imagination was fees finantistically, hor less deedly strip.

At daybreak they sought Man of the Snow-Hill's lodge. They found him a grazzled wreck of extreme age. He was surrounded by his medicine-men, his young chiefs and his squaws. And by the gathering in the smoke-hegrimed but they knew that their approach had been made known. Perfect selence resimed as the white men entered.

Perfect slones regged as the white men entered. An Indran slence, such salence as it would be hard to find anywhere but in the primitive dwelling. The atmosphere of the plane was heavy with the pangent odours of Kills Jean-lik. Both mean and women were smoking it in pipes of red clay with reed stems, and they passed this sign of frendship from one to another in solemn fashioe. All were clad in the parti-coloured blanket, and sat hunched upon their quarters more like beasts than human creatures. vet with that perfect air of dignity which the Indian seldom loses. Man of-the-Snow-Hill alone differed in his dress and attitude. He was wrapped in a large buffalo robe, and was stretched out upon a pile of skins to ease his rheumatics, while, spread out before him, were a number of charms and much "med'cine," which had been so set by his wise men to alleviate his ailments. In the centre of the throng a fire smouldered, and the smoke therefrom rose sullenly upon the dense air and drifted out through a hole in the flat roof Man-of-the-Snow-Hill blinked his watery eyes as the strangers entered, and passed his pine to his favourite squaw, a buxom, sleepy-eyed beauty who sat upon his right. Then he grunted intelligently as he saw the visitors deposit their pile of presents upon the floor, and, in the manner of the neche, seat themselves beside it. Ralph spoke his greeting in Indian fashion, " How," he said

"How!" replied Man-of-the-Snow-Hill, in a thin reedy voice. And his followers echoed the sentiment in charms Then the aged chief held out his hand in further greeting. And each neche in turn shook the white men by the hand.

The visitors filled and lighted their pipes, and passed their plugs of tobacco to the others. Then Ralph began to speak in Cree.

"We come far to speak with Man-of-the-Snow-Hill," he began.

The watery-eved chief shook his head, grunting.

The squaws laughed, and the med'eme-men closed their eyes in sign of not understanding the tongue in which he spoke. Then a young chief harangued has comrades. He could understand the tongue and would interpret. The old chief nodded approvat and continued to gaze greedily at the presents.

Now the conversation proceeded quite smoothly, "We wish to speak with the great Man-of-the-Snow-Hill in private," Ralph said. "We have much to say, and many presents."

The chief blinked with satisfaction, and grunted appreciation. His hined face ht up. He waved one shaking arm and his followers reluctantly departed.

All except the interpreter and the chief squaw.
Then Ralph went on. Nick had care of the presents, and on him the cunning old chief kept his eyes. He opened a large bag of beads and emptied some on a spread of cheap print. The squaw's eves smiled greedity.

"We wish the great chief well," said Ralph, using all the flowery embelishments of the Cree tongue, "and we would live in peace. We have tobacco. beads, skins, prints, and blankets. And we would lay them all at the feet of the great man, the nighty hunter, if he would help us to find that which we seek " Raiph signed to his brother and Nick laid out an array of presents and passed them with due solemnity to the old man. "Ow-ow!" grunted Man-of-the-Snow-Hill, as he waved the things away to his squaw. He was not satisfied, and his eyes watered as though he were weeping: Then Ralph went on.

"We have come on the 'long trail' through the mountains. And we seek the White Source of the Moosefoot Indians."

The chief remained oute calm, but his bleared old eyes shot a sidelong gleam at the sneaker in which there was little friendliness. No other movement was allowed to give evidence of disquiet. It is part of the upbringing of the neche to eachew all outward signs of emotion. The Sun Dance, when the braves are made, is the necessary education in this direction. Ralph saw the look but failed to take its meaning. The squaw watched the white men with keen interest. Nick was groping about in the deaths of a granty-sack.

Raiph plunged into the fantastic story which he and Nick had prepared. The language of the Cree helped him, for the natural colouring of the Indian tongues is as flowery as that of any Eastern race.

"We come from beyond the mountains, from the harting-grounds of forest and rows where the great failters of the Moosefoot Indians dwelt. We come to eith the What Sapuw that the land circs out for her, and the return of the children of the Moose-We come to spake with her of these things, for the time has come when also must leave the forest home and return to the crown thand Manned the Sapur-Hill and return to the crown thand Manned the Sapur-Hill which we will give him?"

"It is well," so thing great man, clong has eyes

while the water oozed from between the compressed lids. "The white men are the friends of the Moosefoot people, and they have many presents. Have they fire-water?"

Nick produced some bottles and the great man reached for them greedily. But the other withheld them.

"What will Man-of-the-Snow-Hill do for the fire-water?" Ralph asked.

The interpreter passed the word.

white men," he answered at once. "He can do no more." A dozen bottles of vanilla essence passed over to the chief. A number of other presents were handed to him. Then without a word the squaw arose and accompanied the white men out.

And without further delay the brothers continued their journey Fleet of foot, untiring, silent as only an Indian woman can be, the squaw led the way, North, north; always north they travelled, over hill, through forest and deep white valley, without let-up to their eager speed. The superstitious dread which had betherto so afflicted the white men now fell away from them. Night came on swift and silent, and camp was pitched on the edge of a dense forest Ere the daylight had quite died out the squaw took the two men to the crest of a hill. She looked out across the virgin carpet of towering pines below them and pointed with one blanket-covered arm outstretched. She was silent while she indicated several points in the vast panorama before her. Then she tried to tell them something

But her language was the language of her tribe, and neither of the men could understand her. Then she spoke in the language of signs, which all Indians aneals so well .....

She raised her hand, pointing eastward, till it reached a point directly overhead. Then she pointed to her feet, and her hand moved slowly in a northern direction, after which she made a running movement with her feet. Then she bent her body and appeared to be gazing about her, searching. Finally she pointed to two very large trees which stood out agent from their fellows. Then again came the motion of running, which finished quickly, and she nomted first to Nick's face and then to herself. After that she stood motionless, with arms folded over her bosom. And the two men read her meaning At daylight they were to start out northward and travel until midday. Then they were to halt and search the outskirts of the forest until they found two mammoth trees standing apart. The space between them was the mouth of a pathway into the heart of the forest. They were to traverse this path a short distance, and they would discover the White Squaw.

Ralph nodded his head slowly in token of comprehension. He waited to see if she had aught further to say. But the woman remained standing where she was, slightly aloof and with her arms folded. Her sleepy eyes were watching the last dying gleam of daylight away in the west. Sudwas long-drawn-out and mournful, but it travelled as mountain cries will travel. It came waving upon the air with a certain rise and fall in it like the rippling of water. It rose up, up, and then hugeringly rised out. The men listened, and looked in the direction whence it came, and, as they looked, a feeling of awe swept over them. In a rush the old "dread" awoke, and their gaze was filled with the expression of it. Out to the west the forest lay gloomy, broading, and within a few hundred vards of them stood the mighty sentry trees which the squaw had pointed out. But now between them, breaking up the dead white carpet which covered the earth, the tail form of the Hooded Man stood silhouetted Grim and ghostly he looked, as, motionless, he gazed upon the watchers With the instinct of self-defence which the wild teaches so insistently, Nick unshing his rifle. Ere Raiph could stay him the shot rang out, echoing away over the tree-tops. The figure had disap-*peared, and the unblemished carpet of snow was as it had been before. Nick stood aghast, for he was a dead shot. Ralph gazed helplessly at the mot where the man had stood.

Suddenly Nick gasped.

" It - it am't human."

And Ralph had no answer to make.

Then presently they turned to where the Moosefoot squaw had stood. She, too, had gone, vansthed as completely as had the Hooded Man. There was the trail of her snow-shoes ruffling the snow, and the men ran following it as far as the forest edge; but here they stood. They could follow no further. Night was upon them. Slowly they returned to camp.

The next day they continued their journey with almost fanatical persistence. They found no sentry-trees such as the squaw had described. Forest, yes, but where in that region could they fail to find forest? The abode of the White Squaw was nowhere to be found.

That night they decided upon their next move or the quet, terse manner of men who cannot bring themselves to speak of the strange feelings which possets them, who are ashamed of their own weakness, and yet must acknowledge it to themselves.

"An' to-morrow —" sad Nick, glancing apprehensively around beyond the fire, over which they were sitting, fighting the deadly cold of the night.
"Transcrow?" exhot Rainh

"To-morrow?" echoed Ralph.
"Where?" asked Nick, looking away towards the south

78 IN THE BROODING WILD

"Um." And he nodded.

" What --- south?"

" South" Ralph shook his head, and smoked on solemnly.

Raiph followed the direction of his brother's gaze,

"An' the Wh-"

CHAPTER V.

THE WHITE SQUAW

Down the sharp incline Nick ran beside his dogs; Ralph was close behind. They were home once more in their own silent valley, and were pushing on to avoid the conting snow-storm which the leaden have of the sky portended. So the dogs were rushed along at a great pace, for the dugout was beyond, a full hour dustant. It had been a weary journey, that return from the queet of the White Squaw Dist the weariness had been mental. The excetement of their going had eaten up their spirit, and left them with a feeling of distressing lassitude. They were soberedy and, as men recovering from drunkenness, they fell ashamed, and their tempers were uncertain.

But a the form of hubbles reased drunn lefts, the

But as the string of huskies raced down into the valley they knew so well, yelping a joyful greeting to the farmitar objects about them, the men began to feel better, and leas like those who are detected in unworthy actions.

The dogs emerged upon their original outwardbound trail and pursued it along the edge of the forest. They needed no urging, and even set a pace which taxed all their masters' speed. The sight of the familiar scenes had banished the "Dread of the Wild" from the minds of the two men, and their spirits rose as they approached the frost-bound river below their home. There were no stealing glances into the gloomy shelter of the woods no nervous backward turns of the head. They looked steadily ahead for the gladsight of their home, and the snap of the crisp snow under the heavy-footed dogs, and the eager, steady pull on the traces brought a cheerful light to their eves such as had not been there for days. But although they had failed to discover the ments of keen disappointment, but it was only a revulum of their stational energe, houghts of her which were, perhaps, less fiery and reckless, but consequently more enduring, still possessed them. Ralph was sepenally callim. He had thought the whole thing over in his deliberate fashion, and, finally, admitted to insueff that what had happened was for the best. Nick was less easy. His disappointment had slightly sourced an already hasty.

White Squaw, she was by no means forgotten. A certain sense of relief had followed their first mo-

but otherwise kindly, disposition. He needed something of his brother's calm to balance him. But, however, in both cases, somewhere deep down in their hearts the fateful flame so strangely kindled was still burning, a deep, strong, unquenchable fire

They were almost home. Before them lay the frozen waterway Beyond that, and above, rose the hill, on the face of which stood their shack; and about them was the brooding silence, still and portentous, but familiar,

The lead-dog plunged down the bank and the rest followed, whilst Ralph and Nick steaded the laden sled. The brief passage was made, and Nick's whin drove the fierce, willing beasts at the ascent beyond. Then, ere the sled had left the river, and while the dogs still struggled in their harness to lift its nose over what was almost a cut-bank, and when Nick's attention was most needed, the whin suddenly became idle, and his stock of drivingcurses changed to a shout of alarmed summise.

Down he dropped upon his knees, and, with head bent low, examined the disturbed surface of the snow. In an instant Ralph was at his side. The dogs had ceased to pull and crouched down in their traces. A strange and wonderful thing had hap-, pened. In their absence their valley had been in82 vaded, and the indications were those of human agency. Nick nomted, and his outstretched forefinger moved slowly over a footprint indicating the sharp.

clean outline which the surface of the snow still retained. A morcasm-covered foot and trodden there, and the mark left was small, smaller than that of an ordinary man. And the two heads, almost touching, bent over it in silent scrutiny Presently Ralph raised his eves and looked ahead. Step by step he traced the marks on up the hill in the direction of the dugout, and, at last, silent speculation gave place to tense, low-spoken words. "In iun moccasins," he said.

"Guess so, by the seam.n"

"Tain't a buck neche neither." "No."

There was an impressive pause, and the atlent land seemed weighted down as with an atmosphere of gloomy presage. Nick broke it, and his voice had in it a harsh ring. The fire of passion was once more alight in his eyes.

"It's a souaw's." he added.

"Yes, sure, a squaw's," and Raiph swallowed a deep breath as though his surroundings stifled him. A thrill of emotion moved both men. There had leapt within them, in one great, overwhelming tide, all the old reckless craze for the shadowy creature of Victor's story At the mere suggestion of a squaw's presence in that valley their blood-tide surged through their veins like a torrent of fire, and their pulses were set beating like sledge-hammers. A squaw! A squaw! That was their cry Why not the White Squaw? Whilst Ralph gazed on ahead Nick still bent over the footprint. The delicate shape, the deep hollow of the ball of the foot, the round cup which marked the heel, and, between them, the narrow, shallow indentation which formed the high arched msten. In fancy he huilt over the marks the tall, lithe, straight-limbed creature Victor had told them of He saw the long flowing hair which fell in a shower upon her shoulders; and the beautiful eves blue as the summer sky. In a moment his tanned face was transformed and became radiant

Ralph, the quet and thoughtful, was no less moved. But he turned from his brother, hugging his own anticipations to himself, and concealing them behind a grim mask of impassivity. His eyes were bright with the same insistent idea, but he told himself that the thing was impossible. He told humself that She lived in the north, and not even the chase of the far-travelling moose could These things he said in his caution, but he did not listen to the voice of his doubt, and his heart beat in great bounding pulsations. Suddenly Nick sprang from the ground, and short and sharp came his words. "Let's git on."

"Ay," replied Ralph, and he turned back to the eled And again the dogs laid foot to the ground; and again the voice of Nick roused the hollow echoes of the shimmering peaks, again the song of the sled-runners rose and fell in cadence brisk and sharp on the still, cold air. But all the world was changed to the men. The stillness was only the stillness which appeals to the physical senses. There was a sensation of life in the air, a feeling of living surroundings: a certain knowledge that they were no longer alone in their valley. A woman was The widening break of the forest gave place to present: the woman. a broad sloome expanse of snow-land. It was the hill down which they had travelled many thousands of times. Above, more snow-laden forest, and above that the steel of the glacier which rose tall its awful limits plunged into the grey world of cloud. The dugout was not yet in view; there was a scored and riven crass, black and barren. supervious to the soft caresses of velvety snow, to be passed ere the home which was theirs would be signified. Besides, as yet neither of the men had turned their eyes from the trailing footprints to look ahead. Thus they came to the higher ground.

Now the barren crag seemed to thrust stself out, an impassable barrier, a mute protest at further progress, a gram, silent warning that the home beyond was no longer for them, no longer the home they had always known. And the hardbreathing dogs toiled on, straining at their breastharness, with bodies heaving forward, heads bent low, and quarters drooped to give them surer purchase. They, too, as though by instinct, followed the footprints. As the marks swung out to pass the rutting cliff the lead-dog followed their course. Nick, on the right of them, moved wide, and craned to obtain a first view of the hint. Suddenly he gave a great shout. The dogs dropped in their harness and crouched, snarling and snapping, their laws clipping together with the sound of castanets, whilst their wiry manes rose upon their shoulders bristhing with ferocity which had in it something of fear Rainh reached his brother's side and peered beyond the cliff

And as he looked his breath suddenly eased, and one fand clutched his brother's arm with a force that brussed the softer flesh, and in aleace the two men gaped at the vision which they beheld. There was what seemed an endless pause while the men and dogs alike focused their gaze upon the stranze asourtion.

A figure, calm, seems, stool before the door of the dispost, from which the legs had been removed. Like a sently "at ease." the figure stool entering grazefully, learning upon the muzzle of a long rifle. For crowned the head which was nobly poored, and a framing of flowing dark has aboved of to preference the antibeliste whiteness of the cam, beautiful face. The roles were detractiversity of the Worthern Indians; beads, budsdom and fars, beautiful face. The roles were detractiversity of the Worthern Indians; beads, budsdom and fars, bearing the present of the Worthern Indians; beads, budsdom and fars, bearing the present of the

A wild, picturesque figure was this creature of the mountain solutide; and, to the wondering eyes of the two men, something which filled them with superatitious awe and a printive gladness that was almost overpowering. The dogs alone seemed to researt the intrusion. There was no joy in their attitude which was one of angry protest. Nick broke the silence

Atten broke the silein

"White — white," he murmured, without knowledge that he spoke aloud

Ralph's face was working. His excitement, slow to rise, now overwhelmed him, and he answered in a similar tone.

"That hair," he muttered. "Dark, dark, an' them chaps wi' beads of Injun patte'n. An' the muzzle-teadm' wearin."

Nick took up the argument as his brother broke off.

"It's a squaw, too."

"Her eyes, he says, was blue," Ralph murmured, breathing hard.

"An' she was leanin' on a gun," Nick added softly,
"11's —"

Pro Cord To led

"By Gar! It is!"

N.ck turned to the dogs with the wild impetuosity of a man who knows not the meaning of patients. His fiery orders fairly buriled the bruses at their task, and the sled leapt forward. On, on, they sped, till they balted within a few yards of the select feure.

The woman showed no signs of fear, a matter which both men set down to the fact that she was a queen among her own people. She still stood in the position in which she had watched their an proach. There was not a quiver of the delicate eyelids, not a tremor of the perfect mouth. Proud, haughty, and masked by the impassivity of the Indian races, she awaited the coming of the strangers. And as men and dogs halted there was an awkwardness. How should they address her? They consulted, and their whisperings were loud enough to reach her ears. They did not attempt to suppress their tones unduly. This woman, they knew, did not understand the tongue of the whites, and probably knew only the language of the Moosefoot people. Therefore they spoke unguardedly. They admitted to each other the woman's identity. Ralph was for speaking to her in Cree; Nick for the language of signs. And while they talked the woman looked on. Had they been keenly observant they would have seen the shadow of an occasiona, smyle curl the corners of her beautiful lins. As it was they saw only the superb form, and eves so wondrously blue, showing like suppliers from an oval face framed with waves of black hair. At last Ralph advanced toward her "You're welcome to our shack." he said, in Croc. The woman shook her beautiful head, but smiled upon him; and the simple soul felt the blood rush

from beart to head

"Try signs," said Nick impatiently, "How's the White Squaw o' the Moosefoots goin' to savvee a low-down bat like Cree. I sed so 'fore."

The blue eyes were turned on Nick with a deep instrutable smile. Nick felt that life at her feet was the only life possible.

And Ralph resorted to signs, while Nick alternated his attention between his idolatrous, silent worship of the lovely woman and clubbing his dogs into quiescence. Their angry protests seemed to express something more shiding than mere displeasure at the intrusion of a stranger. They seemed to feel a strong instinctive antagonism toward this beautiful woman

Ralph persisted with his signs. The woman read them easily and replied in her own sign language. which was wonderful to behold. Raiph and Nick read it as though they were listening to a familiar tongue.

She told them that she was Aum-sa, which is the Moosefoot for "Blue-Sky", and that she was the White Squaw, the queen of her people. She indicated that she was out on a "long trail" huntmg, and that she had found herself in this valley, with a snow-storm coming on. She had seen the dugout and had sought its shelter, intending to remain there until the storm had passed. She made it clear to them that a bull moose and four cown had entered the valley. She had trailed them for many days. She asked the brothers if, when the storm had passed, they would join her in the hunt And to all she said Ralph replied in his less perfect signs, prompted by Nick with blundering impetuosity, and at the end of the parley, a perfect harmony prevailed Two great rough men, with hearts as simple and trusting as those of infants. led this stranger into their home, and made it clear to accept their hospitality.

that the place was hers for so long as she chose A fire was kindled. A meal was cooked. The but grew warm and comforting. The dogs outside velped pitifully and often snuffed angrily at the sill of the door. And the White Squaw calmly accepted the throne of that silent world, which had so long known only the joint rule of the two brothers. She looked out upon her subjects with eves which drove them wild with adoration, but which said nothing but that which she chose to convey Nor did her features betray one simple thought that might chance to be passing in the brain behind. She wore an impenetrable mask of reserve while she watched the effect of the womanly power she wielded.

And that night saw a change in the ordering of the trappers' household. The two men talked it over after their meal. Ralph broached the subject. He waved his arm, the bowl of his pipe gripped in his norny hand, while its stem indicated the entire hut

"Hers," he said. And his eyes were dragged from the object of his solicitude and turned upon Nics.

His brother nodded as he puffed at his pipe "The shed," Raigh went on. "The huskies must borrow in the snow." Agam Nick nodded.

"Wants sweepin' some," observed Ralph again, "Yup. We'll fix it"

" Best got to it."

"Av"

And so the brothers moved out of their home, and went to live in the place which had been given over to the dogs. They would have done more, far more in the r love for the woman who had so strangely come into their midst. They felt that it was little enough that they must be where the dogs were wont to herd. They needed little comfort, and she must have the best they could give And so the brothers moved out of their home

The snow fell that night, a silent, irresistible mountain snow-storm, without a breath of wind,

92 IN THE BROODING WILD

seeming to Joster in indolent playfinesis on the way And up, up, mounted the earth's white carpet, undere and thickers, roller and softer. And a dolygith the mon confronted eight fort of snow, through which they had to due their way. They careed the degote that their prefets treasure, the wondron creature who had come to them, might wondron creature who had come to them, might be light of the had as made to the controller of the controlle in flakes as big as a tennis-ball. Down they ambled, about them seemed to be choked with the gentle horror

But Raiph and his brother, Nick, feared nothing They loved the labour, for was it not on behalf of the beautiful White Squaw?

CHAPTER VI.

THE WEIRD OF THE WILD

For five days the snow fell without ceasing. Then the weather cleared and the sun shone forth, and the temperature, which had risen while the ghostly snow filled the air, dropped with a rush many degrees below zero.

Again the call of the forest came to the two men, claiming them as it ever claims those who are bred to the cartie of trap and far, and for the first time inter lives, the call was heatened to by tensell-ing care, sears which sought to turn from the allowing care, sears that created only for the admittest toom of love. But hairt was strong upon these wood-ince, and they object the votes which had always ruled their lives, although with the skeletion of re-bittion in ther heart of the strength of the strong the strength of the strength o

The days passed, and March, the worst month of the mountain winter, was rapidly nearney: and with it a marked change came over the routine of the Westleys' home. Hitherto Ralph and Nick were acustomed to earry out their work singly, each securing the woodlands and valleys in a direction which was his alone, each making his own bag of furs, which, in the end, would be turned over to the partnership; but A.ne as joined them in their funding, and, somehow, it came about that the men found it necessary to work together. They no longer partle at despiresk to meet again.

IN THE BROODING WILD

94

when the stearing night shades fell. It became the custom for a party of three to set out from the hut, and the skilled trappers found themselves withingly deferring to a woman in the details of their craft. the craft of which they were acknowledged masters. But this was not the only change that took place with the coming of the White Squaw For a woman of the wild, for a woman who had been bred in the mysterious depths of the northern forests, away from her fellow creatures, shut off from all associations of men, Aim-sa displayed a wondrous knowledge of those arts which women practise for the subjugation of the opposite sex. She set herself the task of administering to her compamons' welfare in the manner which has been woman's from the first. She took to herself the bothersome duties with which no man, however self-reliant, loves to be burdened. She went further. She demanded and accented the homage of each of the brothers, not impartially, but favouring first one and then the other, with the quiet enjoyment of a woman who looks on at the silent rivairy of two men who seek her smiles. And as the days lengthened, and the winter crept

Garden

their natures

on toward spring, the peace of the house was slowly but surely undermined. Eve had appeared in the

The calm that still remained was as the smooth surface of water about to holl. Beneath it was choos which must soon break out into visible turnult. The canker of jealousy fastened itself like a secret growth upon the uncultured hearts of the men, sapping and undermining that which was best in

And Aim-sa looked on with eyes which smiled inscrutably, with silent tongue, and brain ever busy. In due course she showed signs of beginning to understand her comrades' language. She even essayed to speak it herself, and, as she stumbled prettily over the words, and placed them wrongly, she became more and more a source of delight, an object of adoration to the poor souls who had been so suddenly born to this new life. With keen appreciation she saw these things while she listened to their speech between themselves, and her great, deep eves would wear many varying expressions. chief among which was the dark, abiding smile.

QE

THE WEIRD OF THE WILD

96 IN THE RECODING WILD

There could be no doubt that what she saw she interpreted anght. She was too clever in everything else to do otherwise. Nick, impatient, headstrong, could never long conceal his feelings. His eves would express displeasure the moment the quieter Ralph chanced to monopolize Auti-sa's attention. Every smile she bestowed upon the elder brother brought a frown to the vounger man's brow Every act or look which could be interpreted into an expression of regard for his brother fired his soul with feelings of aversion and anger till he was well-nigh distracted. Nor was Ralph any less disturbed. In his undemonstrative way he watched Nick, and suffered the acutest pangs of jealousy at what he believed was Aim-sa's marked fire she had kindled with a childlike naiveté which was less of the wild than of the drawing-room. And as day succeeded day, and week followed week, the companionship of these men became forced. The old tacit understanding was replaced by a feverish desire to talk, and this forced conversation only helped to widen the rift which was preference. But the woman continued to star the already gaping between them. One night the friction almost resulted in a blaze,

97

"Victor don't know as she's here." he said.

Nick looked up, glanced round the room, shook his head, and bent over his work again. "No." he answered shortly

" Maybe he won't jest laff."

"No."

Again came Nick's monosyllabic reply, "Guess we'd best let him know." There was a pause. Ralph waited for his brother to speak. As no answer came he went on.

"Who's gom' to tell him?"

Still there was no reply The silence was broken only by the "ping" of the rawhide strands which Nick tested as he drew tight.

"We need some fixin's fer her." Ralph went on. a moment later. "Wimmin, I llows, has fancies, Now, maybe, Victor's got a mighty fine show o' print stuffs. A bit o' Turkey red wouldn't come amiss. I dessay. Likewise beads." " Maybe."

"Why don't you take the dogs an' run in?"

Nick's hands suddenly became motionless, his eyes were raised until they looked into the face of his brother. H.s. seared, weather-heaten skin flushed a desperate bue, and his eyes were about and shining angrily. His lips twitched with the force of the passion sturing within him, and for some seconds he held hymself not daring to trust to speech.

When at last he answered it was in a tone of fiery abruptness.

"Guess not," he said. And it was Ralph's turn to hold back the anger which rose within him.

" Who?" "Say, brother," said Nick, with a biting distinctness, "quit right there. Ther' am't no need fer another word." For a moment Ralph peered into the other's face, but he remained silent. Then he turned over upon his pillow with a sound very like a muttered curse. And from that moment the gulf between them became impassable. Aim-sa was a subject henceforth tabooed from their conversation. Each watched the other with distrust, and even hatred, full grown within him.

And soon there came a further disturbing element in that mountain home. It awoke all the dormant atmosphere of mystery, which, in the minds of the two men, surrounded the lovely Armsta. It awoke afresh the "Dread of the Wild" that had assailed them on their journey north, It came in the early morning, when the world about them was cloaked in the grey shroud of daylight mists, when the silent forests above and below them were rendered even more phostly and sepulchral by reason of the heavy vanour which depressed all on which it settled. Nick was standme, rifle in hand, preparing to sline it across his back. Ralph was stooping to adjust his snowshoes. Asmiss had been left within the hist

A gentle breeze, like the icy breath of some frozen giant on the peak above the but, came lazily down the hillside. It broke the fog into a turmoil of protest. The heavy vapour rolled in huge waves, sought to return to its settled calm, then slowly lifted from the flustered tree-tops. Another breath, a little stronger than the first, shot forcefully into the heart of the morning fog and scattered it mercilessly. Then the whole grey expanse solemnly hited. Up it rose, nor did it pause until the lower hills were bared, and the writty sun shone splendid down mon the crystal earth.

mins were notes, and the similary sins anone game dudy down upon the crystal earth. And as the air cleared the keen eyes of Nick fashed out in a swift survey of the prospect. Suddenly his breathing was sharply indrawn. His rifle never reached his shoulder, but remained grapped in his hand. His eyes had become riveted upon a low hilf are out across the valley. It looked as though it rose sheer out of the forest below, but the watering man faver full well that it was only a spur of the guant that backed it. It was the summart of the clear cut hill, and what was vasible upon it, that held his fascinated attention. Suddenly a half-whispered word estaped him an ad Ralph was beside him in a moment.

"Look!" And Nilci's arm was outstretched pointing

And Ralph looked in time to see the ghostly form of the Hooded Man as it slowly passed from your over the hill "The Hood!" exclaimed Ralph, in awestruck

"The Hood!" exclaimed Ralph, in awestruck tones.

" Ay"
" What's — what's he dom' here?" Ralph asked, more of himself than of his brother. Then he added "He's on our trail"

There was a slight pause

"It's somethin' on her account," Nick said, at last, with uneasy conviction

As if actuated by a common thought, both turned and looked back at the but. Nor was their opensiness lessened when they beheld Aim-sa standing directly behind them, gazing out across the woodland hollow with eyes distended with a great fear So absorbed was she that she did not observe the men's scrutiny, and only was her attention drawn to them when she heard Nick's voice addressing her Then her lids drooned in confusion and she hastily turned back to the house. But Nick was not to be derived "Ye've seen him," he said sharply: "him wi' the hood?" And he made a motion with his hand which described the stranger's headgear. Aimiss nodded, and Nick went on

"We seen him up north. On the trail to the Moosefoot." The woman again nodded. She quite understood now, and her eyes brightened suddenly as she turned their dazzling depths of blue upon her questioner She understood these men as they little thought she understood them

"It is the Spirit—the Great Spirit," she said, in her broken speech. "The Spirit of - Moosefoot Indian. Him watches Aim-sa—Queen of Moose-foot She—White Squaw " Ralph turned away uneasily These mysterious allusions troubled him. Nick could not withdraw his fascinated gaze. Her strange eyes held him eabtive.

They took her words without a doubt. They accepted all she said without question. They never doubted her identity with the White Squaw. Primitive superstition deeply moved them.

"You was scared when you see him just now?"

said Ralph, questioningly Aum-sa nodded

"He come to — take me," she said, halting over the words. "The Moosefoot — they angry — Aim-sa stay away"

"Hah!"
Nick thrust his rifle out towards her "Here take it. It shoots good. When 'The Hood' comes, shoot — savver?"

Am-sa took the gun and turned back to the hut.

Aim-sa took the gun and turned back to the hut. And the men passed out into the forest.

A.m-sa left the hut soon after the brothers had departed. For long she stood just beyond the door as though not sure of what she contemplated doing. And as she stood her eyes travelled acutely over the silent valley. At last, however, she moved lessurely down the hill. Her easy gast lasted just so long as she was in the open, the moment she entered the forest her indifference vanished and she raced along in the dark shadow with all the speed she could summon. The silence, the heavy, depressing atmosphere, the labyrinth of trees so dark and confusing, these things were no deterrent to her. Her object was distinct in her mind and she gave heed to nothing else. She ran on over the snow with the silent movements of some ghostly spirit, and with a swiftness which told of the Indian blood in her veins. Her dilating eyes flashed about her with the searching gaze of one who expects to see something appear, while not knowing whence it will come. Her flowing hair trailed from under her cap with the speed of her going. and the biting air stung her face into a brilliant glow. Her direction was plainly in her mind, for, though dodging her way through trees, she never deviated from a certain course, all her thoughts, all her attention, were centred upon the object of her quest.

Nor did she pause till she came to the low hill which stood on the far side of the valley. As she came to the edge of the forest which skirted its base she drew up and stood for a moment hesitating. Once she raised a hand to her mouth as though about to give voice to a prolonged mountain call, but she desisted, and, instead, set out to round the hill, always keeping to the shadow of the forest edge.

not better coggition to the control of the control of the control of the the month and the head was thrown back, and cost upon the still sur range a cry so mosmical that even the forzest gloom was rendered more cheerless by it as sound. High it rote, soaring upwards through the trees until the valley range with is plantarie want. As if ecogonating the distressful howl of their lead, the cry came back to their from the dependent throats of proviling timber-wedves. The chorus range in the rars from many diversions as the listowards will waited in an attitude of steeting. The moments shipped by. Presently the again sent the call hurthing through the trees. Again came the chorus; again she waited. And the sounds of the chorus were enerre at hand, and a eradding of undergrowth warmed her of the presence of the savage creatures the hale summond. The deep blue eyes were alert and watchful, but she showed no signs of fear, nor did she move. Suddenly a less stelliby and more certain crackling.

of the bush made itself heard; and the roving eyes became fixed in one direction. Beneath the shadow of the laden boughs a tall grey figure appeared moving towards her But this was not all, for several slinking, stealing forms were moving about amongst the barren tree-trunks; bungry-looking creatures these, with fierce burning eyes and small pricked ears, with ribs almost hursting through the coarse hules which covered their low, lank bodies. But all the woman's attention was centred upon the form of the other -- the hooded figure she had seen in the morning. He came with long, regular strides, a figure truly calculated to inspire awe Even now, near as he was to her, there was no sign of his face to be seen. He was clad in the folds of grey wolfskin, and a cowl like hood utterly concealed his face, while leaving him free to see from within As the man came up Aim-sa plunged into voluble speech. They talked together long and earnestly; their tones were of dictation on the part of the woman and subservience on the part of the man. Then the Sourst of the Moosefoot Indians moved away, and the White Souaw retraced her stens to the dugout.

A look of triumph was in Aim-sa's blue eves as she returned through the forest. She gave no heed to the slinking forms that dogged her steps. She saw nothing of the forest about her; all her interest was in the dugout and those who lived there.

When she came to the house she received a shock Nick had returned during her absence. He had come for the dog sled, and had since brought the wast carcass of a grizzly into camp. Now he was stripping the rich fur from the forest king's body The five huskies, with shivering bodies and jowls dripping saliva, were squatting around upon their haunches waiting for the meal they hoped would soon be theirs. The man, still kneeling over his prize, greeted

Aim-sa without nauting in his work "Wher'?" he asked, snaring his words lest he should confuse her

The unconcern of the query reassured her "The forest," replied Amp-sa easily, pointing away down the hill There was a long pause while the woodsman phed his knife with rough but perfect skill. The thick fur rolled under his hands. The snick, snick of his knife alternated with the sound of tearing as he pulled the pelt from the under-flesh, Aim-sa watched, interested, then, as Nick made no further remark, she went on. She pointed back at the forest

"The wolves - they very thick. Many, many -an' hungry"

"They've left the open. Guess it's goin' to storm, sure," observed the man indifferently, wrenched the fur loose from the fore paws. "Yes - it storm - sure." And Aim-sa gazed critically up at the sky The usual storm sentries hung glattering apon either side of the sun, and the blue vault was particularly steely.

Nick rose from his grory task. He drew the fur away and spread it out on the roof of the dugout to freeze. Then he cut some fresh meat from the carcass, and afterwards dragged the remainder down the hill and left it for the dogs. The squabble began as soon as he returned to Asm-sa. A babel of fierce snarling and yapping proceeded as the ruthless beasts tore at the still warm flesh And in less than a minute other voices came up from the woods, heralding the approach of some of the famished forest creatures. Nick gave no heed. The does must defend their own. Such is the law of the wild. He had Aim-sa to himself. and he knew not how long it would be before his brother returned

And Ann-sa was in no way loth to linger by this great trapper's side. It pleased her to talk in her halting fashion to him. He had more to say than his brother; he was a grand specimen of manhood Besides, his temperament was wilder, more fierce, more like the world in which he lived. She hearkened to the sounds of the snarling wolves and her blue eyes darkened with the fatent wolves and her blue eyes darkened with the latent savagery that was in her nature. "The dogs — they fight Hah!" she said. And a smile of delight was in her eyes.

"Let 'em fight," said Nick, carelessly. Then the turned upon her with a look there was no mistaking. His whole attitude was expressive of pos-sionate earnestness as he looked down into the blue worlds which confronted him. She taunted him with a glance of intense meaning. And, in an instant, the fire in his soul blazed

ing. And, in an instant, the fire in his soul blazed into an overwhelming conflagration. "You're that beautiful, Aim-sa," he cried. Then he paused as though his feelings choked him.

"Them blue eyes o' yours goes right clear through me, I guess. Makes me mad. By Garl you're the finest crittur in the world."

He looked as though he would devour the fair form which had raised such a storm within his simple heart. She returned his look with a fearlessness which still had some power to check his devoid of derision, but that was lost upon him.

"Aim-sa --- beautiful. Ah! yes --- yes, I know.
You speak love to me. You speak love to White

You speak love to me. You speak love to White Squaw "
"Ay, love," cried Nick, the blood mounting with a rush to his strong face. "Guess you don't know Ay, love, cries unix, no secon mounting win a rish to his strong face. "Guess you don't know love, my girl. Not yet. But mebbe you will. Say, Aurss, I'll teach it ye. I'll teach it ye real well, gal. You'll be my squaw, an' we'll light right out o'here. I've got balf share in our pile, an' it mi!. a little. I lest say right here as ve'll do it. an' i'll a little. 1 her say right here as ve'll do it. an' i'll a bittle. Jest say right here as ye'll do ri, an' l'Il fix things, an' hinch tup the dogs.

Ne's paused in his oloquence. The squaw's eyes danced with delight, and he read the lock to suit himself. Already he anticipated a favourable answer But he was quiedly undecreved. Almess merely revelled in the passion she had aroused, like a michievous child with a forbodden plaything. She enjoyed it for a moment, then her face sud-destly beame grayen, and her eyelving drough or support of the property of the property of the support of the property of the proper the wonderful eyes which he thought had told him so much. And her answer came with a stuke of the head.

"Arm sa loves not. She must not. The Moose-foot—she is Queen."

"Curses on the Moosefoot, I say," cried Nick, with passionate impulse.

Aim-sa put up her hand.

" The man - 'The Hood.' Fear the Spirit." A chill shot down through Nick's heart as he listened. But his passion was only checked for the moment. The next and he secred the woman in his powerful arms and drew her to his breast, and kissed her not too unwilling lips. The kiss maddened him, and he held her tight, while he sought her blindly, madly. He kissed her cheeks, her hair, her eyes, her lips, and the touch of her warm flesh scorched his very soul. Nor is it possible to say how long he would have held her had she not, by a subtle, writhing movement, slipped from within his enfolding arms. Her keen cars had caught a sound which did not come from the furbing does. It was the penetrating forest cry in the brooding mountain calm.

"Remember - 'The Hood.'" Aim sa warned him. And the next moment had vanished within the disposit.

Now Nick knew that he too had heard the erv. and he stood listening, while his passion surged through his veins and his heart beat in ringhty pulsations. As he gazed over the forest waste, he expected to see the mysterious hooded figure.

111

his checks. He did not see "The Hood," but Ralph walking slowly up the hill. And a harsh laugh which had no mirth in it broke from him. Then a frown settled darkly upon his brow. What, he asked himself, had Ralph returned for? He have no buttles of skins And when Ralph looked up and saw Nick whom he believed to be miles away, his heart grew bitter within him. He read the look on the other's face. He saw the anger, and a certain guiltness of his own purpose made him interpret it aright. And in a flash he resolved upon a scheme which, but for what he saw, would never have presented itself to bim. And as the gleaming sun-dogs, drooping so heavily yet angrily in the sky, heralded the coming storm of elements, so did that meeting of the two brothers threaten the peace of the valley,

CHAPTER VII

IN THE STORMING MICHE

'THE love of these men for the fair creature of the wild had risen to fever-heat with the abruptness of tropical sunshine. It was no passing infatuation, but the deep-rooted, absorbing passion of strong sample men, a passion which dominated their every act and thought, a passion which years alone might mellow into calm affection, but which nothing could eradicate. It had come into their lives at a time when every faculty was at its ripest, henceforth everything would be changed. The wild, to them. was no longer the wild they had known: it was no longer theirs alone. Their life had gathered to steelf a fresh meaning, a meaning drawn from association with Woman, and from which it could never return to the colourless existence of its original solitude.

With the return of Ralph to the camp the day progressed in sullen silence. Neither of the men would give way an inch, neither would return to the forest to complete his day's work, and even A.m-sa found their morose antagonism something to be feared. Each watched the other until it seemed .mpossible for the day to pass without the breaking oit for gathering atom. But, however, the time wore on, and the long night closed down without arriviting happening to precipitate matters.

The evening was passed in the woman's cosposy. Bully has a tilent, brooking. While Nickbally has tilent, brooking. While Nickbally has a tilent, brooking to the high brook has been held belowed to the high brook has been held belowed to the high brook has hadened pipe, intening to the halting phrases of the woman, and garing deeply most been wonderful froger Ralph and all but his love. There was no generousy in his heart, be had given houself up to the deeple had been been been been been and the claim to be the passion. He claims the fardams to humself, and was mady to uphold has claim to long as he had life.

All that long evening he heeded nothing of the dark expression of Ralph's face. The furtive glances from his brother's eyes were fost upon him, and even had he seen them their meaning would have had no terrors for him. With all the blind selfishness of a first love he centred his faculties upon obtaining Aim-sa's regard, and lived in the fool's paradise of a reckless lover

And all the time Raigh watched, and planned. The hitterness of his heart ate into the uttermost part of his vitals, the canker mounted even to his bra.n. The deep fire of hatred was now blazing furnously, and each moment it pathered destructive force. All that was good in the man was slowly devoured, and only a shell of fierce anger remained.

But what Nick failed to observe Aim-sa saw as plantly as only a woman can see such things. Her bright eyes saw the fire she had kindled, and from sheer wantonness she fanned the flame with all the art of which she was mistress. Slowly the hours passed. It was Nick who at last rose and gave the signal for departure. It was an unwritten law between these two that when one left Aim-sa s presence they both left it. Therefore Rainh followed sout, and they retired to their sleeping-apartment.

Outside the might was fine, but the threat of storm hung heavily in the air. The temperature had rusen, a sure indication of the coming blizzard. Ralph was the last to leave the woman's presence. and, ere he closed the door, he looked back at the smiling face, so beautiful to him, so seductively fair in his eyes; and the memory of the picture he Isolated upon remaned with him. He saw the deally in interior, with its rough woodman's belonging; the platered walls of logs, causes and discoloured; the platered walls of logs, causes and discoloured, the armon stream hanging suspended from fivesuch spikes driven in the hink's wises of tunders the blazing stores and crowded storage; the box of an dather and pois, the soles of known hanging from the roof, the piec of assic contaming beauti and diend fish, the latter for the dogs, the colspend blankes which formed the vorman's held, and in the most of still the dazabling presence of Arms. A far as the brushes of a commer evenime.

The door closed softly, and as it closed Aim-sa rose from her blankets. Her expression had changed, and while the men went to their humble couches she moved about with feversh haste, at tentive to the least sound, but always hurred, and with a look of deep anxiety in her after eyes.

No word was spoken as the men rolled into their blankets. The thick wall shut out all sound from within the but. The night was intensely still and silent. Not even was there a single wolf-howl to awaken the echoes of the towering hills. It was as though all nature was at rest

Nick was soon asleep. Not even the agritation of mind caused by a first love could keep him long awake when the hour for sleep came around. With Raiph it was different. His nature was intense that disposition was capable of greater disturbance than was that of the more impetition Niels. He moded in the disposition of the more impetition Niels. He moded in the discloses more from hash than enjoyment. All though he could see nothing he veys constastly wandered in the direction of the rana beatch turn, and he latende for the leavy breating which should tell him of the stumber which would endure that the distribution of the stumber which would endure that the first strate of daws host whave the sky. Soon it came; and Niels smored heavily. Then, without sound Raiphs sat up in hallantest.

He bent has head towards the sleeper, and, assisfed, to one softly to his see. Opening the observed has a fine field out. All was proficurally quest and black. Not a sast amone to the sky, not was there as sign of the head anding northern fights. And while he atoot he head for the first time that might the present of the first time that might the beautif or the first intent that might the time that might the distinct present of the first present

Cold as it was he was consumed by a perfect fever of agitation. His thoughts were in a state of chaos, but the one dominant note which rang out with clarionlike distinctness was that which drew hint towards Aum-a's door. And thither he stole softly, silently, with the tiptocing of a thirf, His face was wrought with fear, with hope, with the eagerness of expectancy.

He passed from the deeper studows in which the lean-to was bathed, and stood at the apple of the house. He paused, and a flurrying of the snow at his feet warned him that he had stepped close to the burrow of one of Nick's husices. He moved quickly aside, and the movement brought him beyond the angle. Then he stood stock-still, held. motionless as he saw that the door of the dugout was open and the light of the oil lamp within was illuminating the beaten snow which fronted the house. He held his breath. Again and again he asked himself the meaning of the strange phenomenon

From where he stood he could see only the light; the doorway was hidden by the storm porch. But, as he strained his eyes in the direction and craned forward, he became aware of a shadow on the snow where the lamp threw its dull rays. Slowly he scanned the outline of it, and his mind was moved by speculation. The shadow was uncertain, and only that which was nearest the door was recognizable. Here there was no mistake, some one was standing in the opening, and that some one could only be Aim-sa.

He was filled with excitement and his heart beat tumultuously, a frenzy of delight seized upon him, and he stepped forward swiftly. A moment later he stood confronting her Just for one moment Anni-sa's face took on a look of dismay, but it passed before Ralph had time to read it. Then she smalled a glad welcome up at the seen eyes which peered down into her own, and her voice broke the silence in a gentle, suppressed tone.

"Quiet -- quiet The night. The storm is near Ami-sa watches." Ralph turned his face out upon the blackness of the valley, following the direction of the woman's gaze.

"Ay, storm," he said mechanically, and his heart pounded within his breast, and his breath came and pounded within his breast, and his breast came and went heavily. Then, an the passe which followed, he started and looked towards the lean to as a sound came from that direction. He was half-fearful of his sleeping brother. Aim-sa's eyes turned towards the rugged features before her, and her gaze was of an intensity such his sleeping brother.

Aim-sa's eyes timed towards the rugged features before her, and her gaze was of an intensity such as Ralph could not support in silence. Words binardered ambidder to his lips, uncontrolled, almospoke as a man who scarce knows what he is saying.

His mind was in the throes of a fever, and his speech partook of the prelevance of delirium.

"You must live with me," he said, his brows frowning with the intensity of his passion. "You must be my wrife. The white man takes a squaw, an' he calls her 'wife,' savvee? Guess he sm't bke the Injuns that has many squaws. He jest takes one. You'll be my squaw, an' we'll go away from here." A smile was in the woman's blue eves, for her memory went back to the words Nick had spoken to her that morning. Ralph went on.

"Guess I love you that bad as makes me crazy. Ther' am't nothin' to life wi'out you." His eyes lowered to the ground, then they looked beyond her, and he gazed upon the disordered condition of the room without observing it. "Nick don't need me here. He can have the shack an' everything, 'cen' my haf share o' the money. Guess we'll trail north an' pitch our camp on the Peace River. What say?"

Ann-sa's eves were still smiling. Every word Nick had sooken was vivid in her memory. She focked as though she would laugh aloud, but she held herself in check, and the man took her smile for one of acquescence and became bolder. He

IN THE REGODING WILL stretched out his hand and caught hers in his shaking grasp.

120

"The white man loves - Aim-sa," the woman said, softly, while she yielded her two hands to hum

"Love? Ay, love Say, ther' ain't nothin' in the world so beautiful as you, Aim sa, an' that's a fac' I am't never seen nothin' o' wimmin before, 'cep' my mother, but I guess now I've got you I can't do wi'out you, you're that soft an' pictur'-like. Ye've jest got to say right here that you're my snuaw, an' everything I've got is yours, on'y they things I leave behind to Nick." "Ah." sighed the woman, "Nick - poor Nick, He loves - Aum sa. too. Nick is great man," "Nick loves you? Did he get tellin' we so?" There was a wild, passionate ring in Ralph's question. The souaw nodded, and the man's expression suddenly changed. The passionate look merged into one of fiery anger, and his eyes burned with a low, dark fire. Aim-sa saw the sudden change, but she still smuled in her soft way. " An' von?"

The voice of the man was choking with suppressed passion. His whole body trembled with the chaos of feeling which moved him.

The woman shook her head.
" An' what did ye say?" he went on, as she remained silent.

"Neck is great. No, Asm-sa not loves Nick."
Ralph sighed with relief, and again the fiery blood swept through his venus. He stopped up close to her and she remained quite still. The blue eyes were raised to his face and Asm-sa's fips parted in to her and she remained quite still. The blue eyes were raised to his face and A.m-sa's lips paried in a simile. The effect was instantaneous. Ralph seazed her in a forceful embrace, and held her to him whist he appealed out the passonate toreract of his love am dist an avalanche of kisses. And they stood thus for long, until the man calmed and spoke with more practical meaning.

"An' we go together?" he asked.

" Now?"
The woman shook her head.

"No - sunrise. I wait here."

Again they stood: be classing her unresisting form, while the touch of her flowing har intoxicated him, and the gentle rise and fall of her boson drove all thought wild within him.

They stood for many minutes; till at last the still night was stirred by the rusting herald of the still night was stirred by the rusting herald of the coming storm. The long-drawn-out sigh of the wind, so sad, so weird in the darkness of night would have passed unheeded by the man, but Arm-sa was alert, and she freed herself from his embrace.

" At sunrise," she said. " Now - sleep." And she made a sign as of laying her head upon a pillow Ralph stood arresolute. Suddenly Arm-sa started.

Her whole bearing changed. A swift, startled gaze shot from beneath her long, curling lashes in the direction of the distant hills. A tiny glummer of light had caught her attention and she stepped back on the instant and cassed into the but, closing the door softly but quickly behind her. And when she had disanneared Ralph stood as one dazed The significance of Aim-sa's abrupt departure was lost upon him. For him there was nothing unusual in her movements She had been there, he had held her in his arms, he had kissed her soft hps. He had tasted of love, and the mad passion had upset his thoughtful nature. His mind and his feelings were in a whirl and he thrilled with a deheious iov. His thoughts were so vivid that all sense of that which was about him, all caution, was obscured by them. At that moment there was but one thing that mattered to him. - Aim sa's love. All else was as nothing. So it came that the faint light on the distant hills burned steadily; and he saw it not. So it came that a shadowy figure moved about at the forest edge below him, and he saw it not. So it came that the light breath from the mountain ton was repeated only more fiercely, and he heeded it not. In those moments he was living within himself, his thoughts were his world, and those thoughts were of the woman he had lossed and held in his arms

123

Nothing gave him warning of the things which were doing about him. He saw no tribulation in the sea upon which he had embarked. He loved. that was all he knew Presently like a sleep-walker he turned and moved around towards the deeper shadow of the lean to. Then, when he neared the door of the shed in which his brother was, he seemed to nartially awake to his surroundings. He knew that he must regain his bed without disturbing Nick With this awakening he pulled himself together To-morrow at sunrise he and the squaw were to go away, and long he lay awake, thinking, thinking

Now the shadow hovering at the forest edge became more distinct as it neared the house; it came slowly, stealing warily up the snow-clad hill. There was no scrunch of footsteps, the snow muffled all such sounds. It drew nearer, nearer, a tall, grey, ghostly shadow that seemed to float over the white carpet which was everywhere spread out upon the earth. And as it came the wind rose, gusty and patchy, and the hiss of runing snow sounded stingingly upon the might air, and often beat with the force of hall against the front of the dugout.

Within a few yards of the hut the figure came to a half. Thus it stood immovable a grey sombre shadow in the darkness of might. Then, after a long pause, high above the voice of the rising wind the howle of the wolf rang out. It came lice a cry of wore from a lost sool, deep none, it tilled upon the air, only to fall and due away loat in the shreke of the wolf through came to the shreke of the wolf through came to the shreke of the wind. Throu came the cry. Then the door of the diagout opened and Aim sa looked out into the relenties might.

The figure moved forward again. It deve near to the door, and, in the light, the grey swathing of fur became apartent, and the cavernous hood lapping about the bead destincted the Spirin of the Moosefoot Indians. Then followed a low murmur of voices: And again the woman moved back into the lut. The grey figure waited, and a moment later Aumea came to him again. Shortly after the door closed and the Spirit moved sitestify away. All was notificated waited.

All was profoundly dark. The darkness of the night was a darkness that could be felt, for the merciless blurgard of the northern latitudes was raging at its full height. The snow-fog had risen and all sign of trail or footstep was swept from the scy carpet. It was a cruel night, and surely one fit for the perpetration of cruel deeds

125

And so the night passed. The elements warring with the fury of wildcats, with the shrieking of fiends, with the roaring of artillery, with the merciless severity of the bitter north. And while the storm swept the valley the two brothers slept, even Ralph, although torn by such conflicting emotions, was lulled, and finally won to sleep by the raging elements whose voices he had listened to ever since his cradle days.

But even his slumbers were broken, and strange visions haunted his night hours. There was none of the peacefulness of his usual repose - the repose of a man who has performed his allotted daylight task. He tossed and twisted within his sleeninghas He talked disjointedly and flung his arms about: and, finally, while yet it was dark, he awoke.

Springing into a sitting posture, he peered about him in the darkness. Everything came back to his mend with a rush. He remembered his appointment at sunrise, and he wondered how long he had sleot, Again he crept to the shed door Again he looked out and finally passed out. Nick still slumbered heavily. The fury of the elements was unabated and they befieted him, but he looked around and saw they doubted them that though surrise was near it was not yet. He passed around the hit, groups with his hands upon the building until the came to the door they passed. He would wasted Anima that the might he passed He would wasted Anima that the might to be flore. He was about to knock but already to be flore. He was about to knock but already has med and the time of the same and the touch and the door swung back.

He did not pause to wonder, adhough he knew that it was Ams als 'cattoon to searce the door. He passed within, and in a house whipper called cut the name that was 20 dats to hum. There came no answer and he stood stall his seesse tenne with excitement. He called again, again. Still there was no nanswer. Now he cloud the door, which created over the suow covering the still. He stood hattening lets Nick Handle the moving on the other awakened and was fearful at the utriuspon. But His impatement could no longer be restrained;
His mignations of the country of the country of the
His mignations of the country of the country of the
his mignations of the country of the country of the
his mignations of the country of the country of the
his mignations of the country of the country of the his mignations of th

shirt and drew out a box of matches. A moment later a light flashed ont, and in one sweeping, comprehensive glance around him he realized the truth. The hit was empty "Gone, gone," he muttered, while, in rapid survey his eyes glanced from one familiar object to another.

Everything was out of place, there were signs of disorder everywhere; and the woman was gone. Suddenly the wind rushed upon the house with wild violence and set everything in the place a-clater. He had a large. Then he seemed to collect himself and went over and felt the stove. It was occ cold. The blankets were land out upon the floor in the usual spread of the daytime. They had not been sleet in

Into his eyes there leapt a strange, wild look. The truth was forcing itself upon him, and his heart was racked with torment.

"She's gone," he muttered again, "an'," as an afterthought, "it's storming temble. Wher'? Why?"

He stood again for awhile like a man utterly at a loss. Then he began to move, not questly or with any display of steath. He was no longer the self-contained trapper, but a man suddenly bereft of that which he holds most dear He ran nossily from point to point, prying here, there, and everywhere for some sign which could tell him whither she had gone. But there was nothing to help him, nothing that could tell him that which he would know. She had gone, vanished, been spirited away in the storm.

He was anddenly mappred. It was the realization of the condition of the neglet which per the thought into his hand. With a bload he springs back to the coor and flings if open. To an extent the storms porch was sheltered, and little derif-stone wand blown in to cover the rices of footsteps. Down he dropped upon hands and lenses. Instantly all his national mismost were bent upon his task? Yes, there were footprints, many, many. There were not to be the contraction of the contraction o instep. Large, large, too. By G---, they're Injun!"

He gave out the last words in a shout which rang high above the noise of the storm, he sprang to his feet and dashed out around to the lean-to. At the door he met his brother Nick had been roused by his brother's cry.

120

Seeing the expression of Ralph's face the larger man stood "By Garl" he cried. Then he waited, fearing he knew not what.

And he sezzed Nick by the arm and dragged him round to the door of the durout.

"She's gone," shouted Ralph. "Gone, gone, can't ve hear?" he roared. "Gone. an' some darned neche's been around. She's gone, in the buzzard, Come!"

CHAPTER VIII.

THE UNQUENCHABLE FIRZ

Ast intennuable week of restless naction and forcurs followed Ain-sa's dissiparizanes. See a forcur will object the about register and bed the comparison of the comparison of

The antagonism of the men was no longer masked by sulten silence. It broke out into open hostuly almost the moment their loss was discovered, and it took the form of bokering and mutual reprisal. Nick last the charge of her departure at Ralph's door Applying all the most unreasonable arguments in support of his belief. Ralph retaliated with a countercharge, declaring that Nick had caused her flight by thrusting his unwelcome attentions upon her. And every word they uttered on the subject added fuel to the fire of their hatred, and often they were driven to the verse or blows.

Note had no reason in him, and, in his super, Ralph was little better. But where a certain calimness came to the latter when away from his brother, Nick continuate to fame with his mind ever set upon what he regarded as only Au loss. This is came that Robly awa sheal, lastly it is tree, but he saw that the time had comes when they must part. It was impossible for them to continue to sheller under the same roof, the roof which had covered to the same roof, the roof which had covered to the same roof, the roof which had covered to the same roof, the roof which had covered to the same roof, the roof which had covered to the same roof, the roof which had covered to the same roof, the roof which had covered and though the save has beeensty, the can not concern the subject, on the last breathy, he looked about the subject to the same has been subject to the same has been subject to the same has been subject to the felt that until Anneas was found the could not part from Nick. Even in has harred for his brother, even in this calibrate moments, jaclosive supervised Were they to part. Nick might be the cost to find the first part of the subject to part. Nick might be the cost to find the random the subject in the subject to the subj in the lean-to, reserving the dugout for the object of their love, against her return.

At length the weather cleared. The search began at ooce. Each day they set out for the forest and hills with hope booying their hearts, and each night they returned with downcast looks, despair in their hearts, and with their brooding anger against each other a dark flame leaping within them

Sometimen, in stoles moments, they visited the place Arms-a had from li. Every day Raphs would clean up the dispost and leave it ready for the White Squark's compation when she returned Every article of furniture had us altitude place, the place which als had selected. With the utmost deliberation he would order everything, and server the fact of the control of th the interantorphoses of these inent could not make been more complete. They hated themselves, they grew to hate the home which was theirs, the wild in which they lived. They set their traps and hunted because it was their habit to do so, but always with only secondary thought for their calling. The chief object of their lives was to find the woman who had taught them the meaning of love.

who had taught them the meaning of love. Writer was vanuing. The soft sows in the forest was nething rapidly. Every morrang found there was nething rapidly and the prover was rapidly increasing, and already a sinth of snow water was upon the nebound river. The overpowering height of the valley gleaned and sparkful on the cheep' daylight, the clear mountain art drew everything nearer and the sutting strate, impired by the crush of towering bills, was exagginated as the sun rote in the harvest and re-world. And now, too, the forst grew dask amount, and the study drapping of the meding mow upon the branches became hie a heavy rainful within the gloony depths.

One day Ralph returned home first. He was cooling the support. The ten was depoing behand the western mountain-tops, and the red gold reflected support of the property of the property of the The winter sky had given place to the desper hus of spong, and, in place of the heavy grey cloud-caps, freezy paffs of white, brite less darking than the snowly half terminely, deducted heave vault above. The forest was alive with the celes of the feathered word, as they sought taker set in their newlybuilt nests. It was not the bright chatter of gay song-brids such as belong to warnier chimes, but the house cross of water-low, and the harris creams of the preying lords of wing and air. The grey eagle in his lofty eyrie; the gold-crosted wal transhawk, creatures that I've the stremouss life of the silent lands, fowl that live by war. The air was very still, the prospect perfect with a wild

runned beauty

The train dogs were lying about lazily, but their attitude was deceptive. Their fierce eyes were only partially closed, and they watched the cook at his work, waiting for their share in the meal. Presently a sharp snarl broke from one of them,

Presently a sharp send Irube from one of them, and he spuring to his freet and walked round his neighbour in a heetoring fashoon. Bulph just neighbour in a heetoring fashoon. Bulph just offered produced the send of the produced produced the produced of the history fashoon. They walked round and round each other, seening almost to types in their efforts to browbest. Their muss bristled and them fange hard to the guest, but never a sound came from their deep-sund furnats. And sound came from their deep-sund furnats. And the widest fany. The other doep paid no heed; the widest fany. The other doep paid no heed; the small which emanated from Bulgh's cooling-pot their indifference plainly said so.

135

Ralph went to the shed and returned with some fresh lows. As he reached the fire he paused. The disputing does had attracted his attention. A quick spring in and out, a slash of the bared fangs, and the shoulder of one dost was laid open. The other brutes were on their feet in an instant. The scent of blood had greater attraction for their wolfish senses than the smell of cooking food. They gathered round with licking hips. Ralph stepped back from the fire and raised aloft one of the logs he had brought. The next moment it was burtling through the air. It took the combatants somewhere m the midst. They parted, with a howl of pain, and the spectators hurriedly returned to their contemplation of the fire. In a moment temporary peace was restored. Ralph stood to see that hostilstes were definitely postponed, then he went on with his work Suddenly, up out of the valley came the sound of Nick's voice. It trolled harshly up the hillside, giving out strange echoes which confused the melody he essayed. The listening man recognized the words of "The Red River Valley," but the time was obscured.

The unusual outburst held Ralph silent, wondering Nick was not given to singing at any time, and the events of the last few days were not likely to inspire him. What had caused the change?

The voice sounded nearer In spite of the tunlessness of the song, Ralph thought he detected a joyousness in the tone which was unusual. A shiver passed down his back, and his thoughts flew at once to Almaa.

Gazing down the hill be saw Nick emerge from the forest and face the slope as a swinging pace. His powerful limbs moved easily, with a springeness of strole that was not natural to a man accustomed to the labours of the "long trail." His face was no longer battled in deponding gloon, his yets were shining, and his strong features had upon them an expression of tramph. He brought with him an atmosphere as fresh and joyous as the dawn of a momentum summer sky.

Over his shoulder were slung several most pelts, newly taken from the carcasses of golden foxes, and in his hand he carried two large traps, which he was bringing home for repair. But these things were passed unheeded by his brother, it was the vocc, and the look upon his face that unpleasantly fixed Rajbr's attention. But a further astonishment came to the waiting man. Nick shouted a greeting as he came.

"A great day, Ralph," he cried. "Two o' the finest veller-bellies I've seed. Most as big as timberwohres " Ralph nodded, but said no word. He knew without being told that it was not the pleasure of such a catch which had urged Nick to cordiality. He watched the coming of his brother with his quiet, steady eyes, and what he beheld beat his heart down, down as though with the fall of a sledge-hammer As Nick's overtures met with no response, he said no more, but came and stood beside the spluttering fire, while his eyes searched the gloomy face of his brother. Then, with an impatient movement, he threw his traps down and removed the pelis from his shoulder. He passed over to the dugout and spread the recking hides upon the roof, well out of reach of the dogs, then he returned in silence to the fire.

His coming had been the signal for a renewal of hostilities among the dogs, and now a sharp clip of teeth drew his attention. The two heasts Ralph had senarated were at it again. Nick seized a pole and trounced them impartially till they scattered out of his reach.

A portentous silence followed. Nick was casting would withheld.

about m his mind for something agreeable to say. He felt good. So good that he did not want to tell Ralph what was m his mind. He wanted to be sociable, he wanted to break through the scy barrer which had ruse between them, he felt that he could affect to do so. But ideas were not forthcoming. He had but one thought in his brain, and when, at last, he sooke it was to blurt out the very thing he

"I've seen her," he said, in a voice tense with emotion And Ralph had known it from the moment he had heard his brother singing He looked up from his coolong-pot, and his fork remained poised above the black iron lid. At last his answer came in a hoarse whisper. "Her?" "Yes, I spoke to her, I guess."

"Spoke to her?"

"Spoke to her?"

And the whites of the elder man's eyes had become bloodshot as he stood up from his crouching

attrude over the fire

His stohd face was unmoved, only his eyes gave expression to that which passed behind them. There was a dangerous look in their sunken depths which expression to that which passed behind them. There was a dangerous look in their sunken depths which the depressed brows accentuated. He looked into his brother's face, and, for awhile, the supper was forgotten. "Yes, spoke to her," said Nick, emphatically,

I to

"She am't gone from us. She am't left this valley She's scarrt o' the Moosefoots. That all-fired 'Hood.' She said as they were riled that she'd atopped in the white man's lodge. Said they'd made med'cine an' found out where she'd gone. Say, that 'Hood' is the very devil, I'm thinkin'. She's

But though Ralph listened to his brother's words he seemed to pay little heed. The blow had fallen on him with stummer force. Nick had seen Aun-sa, he had been with her that day, perhana all day. And at the thought he broke out in a sweat Something seemed to rise up in his throat and choke him

"You look that glad. Maybe you've had a good tume 21

Ralph's words came as though he were thinking alond

The devil stored in Nick's heart.

"Glad man? Glad? Av. I am that, surely She said as she'd been on the watch fer me ever since the storm quit. She said as she wanted to hunt wi' me"

scaret to death of him "

&quot;You?"

140

"An' why not? I ain't lyin', I guess. I 'lows she ain't like to say they things fer passin' time. She was allus easy an' free wi' me. Mebbe you're kind o' quiet. Wimmin mostly Likes them as ken talk."

Ralph's eyes darkened. His set face became more rugid. Then suddenly a harsh laugh broke from his unmoving lips.

"Guess you're crazed. Nick. That woman's foolin' ye."

Then he awarg about as the sound of a violent strengtle came from among the dogs. It was the awaring interruption. Another moment and the booding hate of the two mer would have broken boote. Nick turneds, too. And he was just in time, too the cone of the hastless was down and the rest of the train were upon han, best on taxing; out the savage file. Nick chabeles was down and they not fall the deast till the tori beast was upon his feet again. The was always to face his award of the hastless was down and buildingshed early to face his amagnatists with undifficultied to a quarrel than the fight to the death. It thole Nick consensation to hs dogs, and by the time this was accomplished his own feelings had calmed. Ralph, recognizing the danger of his mood, had gripped himself sternly, and returned to his cooking. THE UNQUENCHABLE FIRE 141

And so the cruss was passed and the disaster temporarily averted. But in their hearts both men knew that the savage wild, ingrained in their natures, would not always be so easily stifled. Unless they parted, a dire calamity must surely befall.

CHAPTER IX.

TO THE DEATH

THE forest gloom is broken by gladdening beams of sunlight. They sketch a mazy fretwork pattern of light and shade on the dank underlay of rotting vegetation which the melting snow has laid bare The air is weighted down with heavy, resinous odours, and an enervating warmth has descended to the depths of the lower forests. But Winter has not yet spread its wings for its last flight Spring's approach has been heralded by its feathered trumpeters, garbed in their sober plumage, It is on its way, that is all. The transition of the seasons is at hand. Winter still resists, and the gentle legions of Spring have yet to fight out their annual hattle. The forests are astir with wild. furred life, the fierce life which emphasizes the solitude of the mountain world. The pine-cones scrunch under the feet of the prowling beast as he moves solemnly upon his dread way, there is a swish of bush or a snappme of wood as some startled animal seeks cover, or a heavy crashing of branches, as the mighty-antiered moose, solenn-eyed, unheeding, thrusts limited through the undergrowth. Rabby was benchmar over a large tran. It was still

143

Rajh was bending over a large trag. It was said that a though the bash lade hern moment. It had been set at the mouth of a narrow track where it opened out in a small, sowe-overed clearing. The blood stame of the raw ment with which it had been taken I be the said of the said of the said of the hard were still mouth, but the flesh used had been taken I be turned from his subjection. There were footprints in the snow, evendently the tracks of a number-worl? His face expressed his diagust as her bealted the trag. Worlew were the peter of his life. There shens were almost worlthese, and they were as examining as any deep flow. A rap had no externs for comming as any deep flow. A rap had no externs for comming as any deep flow. A rap had no externs for Suddenly he drew up and scanned the white carpet. His training noticities were keeply sleep

The snow was disturbed by other marks than those mude by the wolf. In places the ground was laid bare, and broken pine-tones were displayed upon its surface as though some great weight had crushed them. Moone suggested useful? He looked kently at the marks. No, the snow displayed no imprint of clown hoofs: It looked as though it had been raked by a close-set harrow. To him there was much significance in what he saw. Only one cream.

ture could have left such a track. There was but one animal in that forest world that moved with shambling gait, and whose paws could rake the snow in such a manner. That animal was the grizzly, the monarch of the mountain forest.

The man holded further over the snow, and, na a few moments, had learned all be weighed to know. There were two distinct traits, one approaching, the other departing. But there was a curnous difference between them. The approach had evidently been at a slowenly, ambling pace. The raking of the training feet showed this. But the departing track displayed every gipt of great hate. The now had been flurned to an extent that had obliterated all semblance of foomers, and the state of th

Ralph unshing his rifle. Ahead of him was the track, ahead of him also was a further break in the forest where the sun shose down with dazzling brilliancy. He passed on and looked up at the perfect sky. Then be took the direction of the track it struck out for the northeast.

"I wonder if Nick's lit on it," he muttered. "It 'ud be his luck, anyway"

He further examined the tracks, and the whiteness of the snow warned him they were quite fresh. "Am't been made more'n an hour," he added, in further solnoquy "Guess, I'ß trail him." And he set off hot foot through the forest, The trail was well marked, and he followed it with ease. And as he moved slowly on his mind had much leasure from his task. The direction the bear had taken was towards the country over which Nick was working Also Ralph could not help recollecting that the northeast was the direction in which lay the Moosefoot camp. True there were many miles of wild country between him and the Indians, but the knowledge of the direction he was taking quarkly turned his thoughts into other channels, and his quarry no longer solely occupied his mind. His eyes followed the trail, his thoughts went on miles ahead

It was three days since Nick had first told Ralph of his meeting with Aim-sa. And ever since the latter had sought her himself, but his search had been in vain. And each of those three days Nick had returned to camp happy and smiling in a manner which maddened his brother. Now he thought of these things. He told himself, with warped reasoning, that Nick had gone behind his back, that he had taken undue advantage in his winning of Aim sa's regard. He forgot, or admitted not, his own doings, his own secret meeting with her on the night of her flight from the digout.

Such was his mood as he traversed the forest

146

paths. Through del and brake; through endless twilght maze of black tree-trunks, over mosegrown patches, and roots and stumps recking with the growth of rank fungus. But his eyes never lost the indications of his quarry, and at antervals be paused listening for some sound which should tell him of the beast's roccum.

A frozen creek crossed his way. The surface was covered with the watery slush of melting snow, and great cracks ran in many directions through the ice.

He crossed it and the forest closed about him again. The beast he was trailing had paused here, had moved countabout as though seeking the direction he required. Ralph followed the creature's movements, understanding with the acute ness of his forest breeding.

Suddedly he started and a half-stifled cry broke from him. He dashed forward to a pownt where the snow had drifted and was now disturbed. He halted, and looked down. Other footports minigled with those of the hear. They were small, and ladbeen made by moreomatic had feel he had seen such footprints before. He knew the owner of the ete which had made these maprints. Alm-saf were such as these—Alm-safs! He will be the safe the such as these—Alm-safs! He was the safe the safe the like syst not in every detail slowly, footly

His eyes took in every detail slowly, for

Where was the now? He must follow. Then he reremented. Something else was following, not him, but her. He straightened humself up, and a mustered scelamator beloe from hu lips. Now woods, the bast must have sented the woman's woods, the bast must have sented the woman's presence and was tracking her down. She had ger that awired beforest, indexwong of the diameter of the diameter

Forgetti of N.ck, forgetti of all else, Rajby pursued the double trail. Danger threatment the woman he loved, for aught he knew had already overalken her. To hus credit he it said, that, as he med over the nodden carpet of the forest, not no estilial thought possessed hum. Amass was in the anodanger, and so he went headings to the research and so he went headings to the research that had not the sound to the contract of the sound to the sound

The world about him might have been bathed in the blackness of inght for all he heeded it, only the track of footsteps stood out to his gaze like a trail of fire. His speed was great; nor was he conscious how great. He no longer walked, but ran, and thought nothing of distance, nor the passing of time. The trail of pursuer and pursued still lit, red hot, before him, and the cry of his heart still rang out -On! On!

It was noon when his speed slackened. Nor was it wearnines that cheeked him. Once in the echonique wood he had heard the distant sound of breaking undergrowth. The prospect about him had changed. The forest had become at mayled mare of low growing shruk, dotted with gasat growth of mayle, spruce, and blue-gum. It was a wider, deeper helilow than any hinterton passed, and the are was warmers. It was the valley of a wide, swift-flowing river.

The declority was alrupt, and the rush of the rever, too swift to ascomb to the groy of winter, sounded family up from below Suddenly he suited intering, and the sound of breaking undergrowth came to him again and again, he waited for the cry of the human, but it did not come. With beautig heart he hurried on, his mind was suited to the suited of the suited of the of the grazily. His rink was ready to hand and be looked for a sight of the dark fur through the bush abraid.

Now his movements became almost Indian-like in their stealth. Bending low to avoid the rustling branches, he crept on, selently and swiftly He no longer followed the tracks. He had turned off, meaning to come up with his quarry against the wind. At every opening in the bish he paused, his keen eyes alert for a sign of his prey. But the leafless branches of the scrute, family insight of with the signs of coming spring, alone confronted him. only that, and the noise of breaking brushwood only tha

It quickly became plain to him that the bear was no longer advancing, but was moving about uncertainly, and as he realized thus, his heart was gropped with a terrible fear. Had the brute come up with his prey? Had the tragedy been played out? He dashed forward, throwing all custion to the winds; but ere he had gone fifty yards he came to a halt, like one paralyzed cannot a variety control of the came to a half, where the land goes flig yards he came to a half, he came to a half, he came to a half, and the control half with the came to a half with the came to a half with the came to the came to less, riven: a forest grant blasted by some mountain storm. Nick was standing beside it, his gun rested against its blackened sides, and, upon a fallen bough, scarcely a yard away, Aim-sa was seated. They were in deep converse, and Ralph was near enough to hear the sound of their voices, but not to distinguish their words. As he strained his tinging gars to catch the tenor of their speech, he could hear the movements of the bear in the advacent woods

150

The two in the open seemed all unconscious of what was going on so near them. Nick was gazing upon the woman, his heart laid bare in his eyes And Am-sa was smaing up into his face with all the arch coquetry of her sex, with that simple, trusting look which, however guileful, must ever appeal to the strong man.

For awhile Ralph looked on The exquisite torture of his heart racked hum, but he did not turn away to shut out the sight. Rather it seemed as of he preferred to thus harass bimself. It was the working of his own angry passion which held him. feeding itself, fostering, nursing itself, and goadmg him to fury

Suddenly the sound of movement close at hand broke the spell which held him. He looked, and saw the bear less than twenty yards off

He gropped has role, and has feet thought was to also I have been harter's entitled which rose within here. But something held han, and has weapen did not move from his sheer; a harsh vioce whitipered to him, and he betiened to words of real contact. Then a retail-ason of feeding sweep ever han, and he shock luminosal at studyed to got not of something which duing about him and oppressed him. But the moment with their flowbrach coded, his beam maddened with letter flowbrach.

The dark form in the bush beyond moved. There came no sound, and the waiting man wondered if his eyes deceived him. No cat could have moved more silestly upon its prey. Not a twig creaked It moved on stealthily, mexorably, till it paused at the edge of the opening.

Raiph's eyes turned upon the dead tree. Nick's beke was turned, and Armans was nittent upon her companion. She seemed to be hanging upon his every word. And Balph's heart grew larder within him. His hand held his rifle in a nervous clutch and his fingen-mils scored he stock. A short from him would avert causater; a shot would arrest that termble advance. But the short remained unbern; the trigger still waited the compressing hand. And the unconcation brother stood with death stealing upon him from beyond the fringe of the woods.

Solemnly the great grizzly advanced. Once in the open he made no pause. The lumbering beast looked so clumsy that the inexperienced might have been foreiven a smile of radicule. Its ears twitched backward and forward, its head lolled to its gait. and though its eyes shone with a baleful ferocity they seemed to waze anywhere but at its intended victims.

Raigh stood watching, with his compressed and raws set, and a cruel frown darkening his brow But his heart was beating in mighty pulsations, and somewhere within him a conflict was raging, m which Evil had attacked in overwhelming force, and Good was being beaten back.

Within ten yards of the tree the bear halted and reared itself imon its haunches. Thus for a moment it towered in terrible menace.

It was the last chance Ralph's lips moved as though to shout, but only a low muttered curse came from them. Suddenly the air was solit with a piercing scream. Aim-sa stood erect, one arm was outstretched noming, the other rested against the tree as though she would steady herself. Her eves were staring in terror at the huge brute as it came towards them.

Nick swung round. He was too late. There was no time to reach his rifle. His right hand plunged at his belt, and he drew a long hunting-knife from its sheath, and thrust himself, a shield, before Aim-sa.

Ames.

Ames when the savage heat of Rajah, mose a with the sard with the late in Ma when of hornor manner of the sard when the sard when the sard when the hornor passed over him. It was not of his brother he hought, but of the woman to loved. Nick's death would only be the foreruner of hers. In a flash and leprangs to his shoulder. A score passed while his keen eyes ran over the alghts, the compressing hand was upon the trugger. A post of sender A sharp report. The grazily avaing round with a lates. He had not slopped, an energy with a lates. He had not slopped, an energy for the forest where Rajah sand one straight for the forest where Rajah sand of the sample for the forest where Rajah sand as a few strikes.

Ralph went out to meet him, but, ere he came up, the creature tottered. Then, reeling, it dropped upon all fours, only, the next instant, to roll over upon its side, dead.

Ralph gave one glance at the body of the great bear, the next moment its presence was forgotten. He wassed on and confronted those whom he had

He passed on, and confronted those whom he had unwillingly rescued. The depression of his brows, and the glint of his eyes and merciless set of his jaws, all gave warning of a danger that dwarfed to insumplicance that which had just passed.

"I 'lows I hadn't reckoned to find you wi' company," Ralph said, addressing his brother with a quietness that ill-concealed the storm underlying his words. "Mebbe I didn't calc'late to find you, anyway."

There was no mistaking the challenge in his look, Nick saw it. His impetuous temper rose in response. The bear was forgotten. Nether alfuded to it. The two men faced each other with the concentrated jealous hatred of weeks' growth upper most un their hearts.

"Wal, I guess y've found me. What then?"
Nick squared himself, and his expression was as

Rick squared himself, and his expression was as relentless as that of the older man. Ralph paid no heed to the taunting inquiry. He looked over at Aim-sa, who had shrunk away. Now she answered his look with one that was half-pleading, half amused. She realized the feed which was between the men, but she did not understand the rugged, forceful natures which she had so stirred.

"Say, gal." Ralph said abruptly "Ther's jest us two. Ye gave yourself to me that night, maybe you've give yourself to him since. Which is it, him or me? Ye'll choose right here. Chooset"

Nick turned and looked at her with strained. anxious eyes. Rainh's face belied his ontward calm

" An' what if Aim-sa loves neither?" the woman asked, with a laugh in which there was no mirth. and some feer

"Then she's had "

Raiph's teeth shut with a snap.

Armys looked from one to the other. She was beginning to understand, and with understanding came a great dread. She longed to fiee, but knew that to do so would be impossible. "Aim-sa loves both," she said at last

There was a long, deathly silence. The broading solitude of the wild was never more pronounced than at that moment. Then Ralph looked into the face of his brother.

and Nick returned his gaze.

"You hear?" said Ralph. "She is an Injun. I guess, an' don't know no better Maybe we'd best settle it for her" "That's so "

Ralph threw off his buckskin shirt. Nick removed his heavy clothing.

" Stand aside, woman," said Ralph. "Ye'll wait by, an' your man'll claim ve."

146 IN THE BROODING WILD "Knives?" said Nick, through his elenched teeth-

" Knives" And then again silence reigned.

CHAPTER X.

THE BATTLE IN THE WILD

This woman shrank back The last trace of lerely had vanished from her eyes. Their bleepth gazed out good he strange scene with horror and frame to be suffered to be suffered to be suffered to the suffered with their two remains a behalf of sperif stook her frame. She saw in the eyes of both the cruel puppes which was in the eyes of both the cruel puppes which was in the eyes of both the cruel puppes which was in the eyes of both the cruel puppes which was in the eyes of both the cruel fluoring the suffered to the suffere

There was no sentiment in her thoughts. These two were nothing to her. She would regret the death of enther as she would regret the death of any strong, healthy man; but that was all. Her horror was a natural revolsion at the prospect of seeing death dealt out in the ruthless manner that these men contemplated.

Just for one instant the desire to stay the combatants rose uppermost in her mind. She stepped forward again and raised a protesting hand

"Are you brothers or wolves of the forest that you'd kill each other? If you fight for Aim-sa, she'll have neither of you."

Her words rang out clear and incisive. In her excitement she had forgotten the halting phrases of the White Squaw, and spoke fluently enough.

Nick was oromously silent. Ralph answered her. "Stand back, an' remember ye're the squaw of him as wins ye in fair furbi."

Then he cried out to his brother.

"Are ye ready?"

Nick made no subble regly. He fane looked the worth has light offer frame. He was ready, and the passion in him was more than willing. Once, the subble has been been for the fane with his opponent, he glanced round at Annea. It may have been that he sought one look of excouragement, one make it is may have been. But the beauting face he looked upon the fane of the fane was the fane of the fane was the fane of t

For a moment a heavy cloud spread itself over the face of the sun, and the grey daylight of winter again covered the mountains. Instantly the forest lost its look of spring, and the air returned to the ch.ll of the darker months. The bald break in the forest looked more cheerless than a waste ground in a city, and those who stood about to fight for life became savage images that looked something less than human. Nick, larger than his brother, was a tower of thew and muscle. As he stood there, clad in a cotton shirt and trousers belted at the waist, he was the figure of a perfect man. His shapey head was thrown back, but his handsome face was distorted by its expression of hate. Raiph was the smaller by mches, but his muscles were as fine-tempered steel. There was even more of the wild in his expression than in that of his brother. The ferocity in his face was wolfish, and not good to look upon

Both had hared their hunting-blades, long knives at once vicious and coldly significant.

There was no further word. The men bent low and moved circling round each other. Their attitudes were much those of wrestlers seeking an advantageous. "holt." By common consent they avoided the tree keeping to the pozing soil of the open.

Ralph displayed the more activity. His lesser

atainer mediened to a quickness hus boother did not possess. He acquibt to use art to draw the implement of the process. He acquibt to a sear to order to the country of the other, and along on a search of tents. But strangely enough Nick dipplayed a control works have surgement (Fe had 1 all appreciation on the life and death strongels. He had faced in our draw what the other hand streament of the forest control work for short and any and the start of the forest control long for level in the check, and has comment at the start of the first soon care sides to a suit did not seen to a suit did not seen to a suit of the start of the first soon care sides to a suit did not seen to a suit of the start of the first soon care sides to a suit did not seen to a suit of the start of the first soon care sides to a suit of the start of the first soon care sides to a suit of the start of t defensive, reading in his brother's eyes the warning of every contemplated attack.

But Raiph's swift movements harassed Nick, they pressed him sorely, and often drove him to extremity in his defence. For long he kept distance, knowing that while the other was wasting strength his own was being carefully husbanded and slashing orslaught, while Nick fought on the Ten muntes passed. Still they had not come together Rajho charged in with uprassed brate, the blow was warded, and he passed on only to swing round on the instant and repeat the attack from the opposite direction. But always Nick faced hum, grum, determined, and with deadly purpose. Once the latter slapped; the footing was none too secure. Instantilly Rajhi burded humoelf upon hum and his blade scored his brother's arm.

leaving a trail of blood from elbow to wrist. That one touch let loose Nick's pent-up fury and he allowed himself to be drawn

The two came together with a terrific impact. Nick slipped again. This time he could not save himself. His feet shot from under hum and he went down backwards. In his fall he sexed Ralph's kutificarm at the wrast, and the same time aimed a slashing blow at his face. But Ralph's agitity was as furnous as it was full of force. In turn he caught Nick by the wrist, and, with a great werench, sought to disdocate his shoulder.

As the moments swept by, the brothers rolled and writhed, with every faculty at terrible tension. Now Ralph was uppermost, now Nick sought to drive the downward blow Now Ralph strained to twist his kinfe-arm free from the iron grip that held it; now Nick slashed vamily at the air, seeking to sever the sinewy limb that threatened above his face.

It required only the smallest slop, the benfest relixation of the tessed-raws muscles on the part of either, and death awarded the unformant. For long sentier yedded one toda, but the attruggle was too force to last. Human strength has but arrow the strength of the stre

Already the breathing of the combatants had become painfully heavy, but while Ralph struggled with all the fierceness of his passion, and put forth his whole strength, Nick reserved a latent force for the moment when opportunity arrived. And that moment was nearing

Ralph was under and Nick's great weight held him down, for the smuous struggles of the other had lost their vim Suddenly, with a mighty effort, the younger man wrenched his knife-arm free, and a cry, hoarse, fierce, sounded deep in his throat. But his effort had cost him his hold upon his brother. There was a wicked gleam of steel as both men struck.

Raiph, striking upwards, was at a disadvantage. His blade, aimed at the neck and shoulder, struck Nick's check, laid the fiesh open to the lower jaw, glanced, and buried itself in the muscle of the shoulder. Nick's blade smote with a fearful gash that the saide of his heather's throat.

It was over.

Ralph lay quivering and silent upon the ground.

Nick rose staggering and dased. He noved sway like a man in a Gream. His arms bung limply at his sides, and his eyes looked out across the wide woodland valley with an uncomprehending stare. His face was almost ourcoognicable under the flow of blood from his wound. Once, as he stood, one hand went up mechanically to his face, then it dropped again without having accomplaished its purpose. And all the while his vocant eyes attend out upon—nothing.

Presently he sat down. His actions were almost like collapse, and he remained where he sat, still, silent, like an image. The moments passed. The quiet was intense. A faint murring of flowing waters came up from the river beyond. 164

Suddenly he moved. Then in a moment he seemed to break out into passonate life. The stony stare had gone from his eyes. Intelligence looked out, intelligence such as one might find in one whose mind is on the verge of losing its balance; a fearful, anxious, hintel intelligence, face to face see the seements.

with an unending horror.

He moved to where his brother was lying, and stood shaking in every limb, he had realized the work of this hands. He asshed he blood from his face. The vivid stain dyed his fingers and the touch of the warm tode only seemed to add to his terror. He went up to the still form and looked down. Then he backed saway, slowly, see ply steps, but still unable to withdraw has fascinated gate. Suddenly a cry broke from his loy. It was his like the substitution of the still unable to withdraw has fascinated gate.

Suddenly a cry broke from his lips. It was bit ter, heartrending. Then a quick word followed. "Wher's --"

His question remained uncompleted. His head turned swiftly, and he looked stupidly about him. The clearing was empty of all save himself and that other lying upon the ground at his feet, and, beyond, the careas of the dead grazily. A dreadful fear leapt to his brain, he moved tottering. His action guined swiftness suddenly. He ran to the forest edge, and, with hungry eyes, gazed in beyond the sparse fringes of seruls. There was nothing.

ing there. He moved away to the right and ran in amongst the low-growing bush, only to reappear with more feverals hatte, and eyes whose firey glance seemed to shoot mevery direction at once. On he went, round the edge of the entire cleaning, in and out, like some madman running purpose-lessly in search of some phantaxy of his brain. There was no one there but hamself, and the two soll forms upon the ground A mans was gone!

But he did not pause. H.s brain was in a tumult, there was no reasoning in it. He searched every-where Bush that could conceal nothing bager than a bettle was examined, to his distorted fainly the lightning striden tree presented a hidmey-place. Further he penetrated into the woods, but always only to return to his bother's side, distraught, wears from loss of Mond.

Gone! Aim-sa was gone!

At last he stood, an awesome figure, bloodstaned, dashevelled. He was at his brother's side as he had been a dozen times during his rand search. It was as though he returned to the dead for company. But now, at last, he moved away no more. He looked upon the pallid face and starring, side less eyes, and the red pool in which the body weltered.

There was a long pause, and the quiet set his pulses beating and his ears drumming. Presently he turned away. But as by a magnet drawn, he turned quickly again and his eyes more more reset upon his brother's body. Then all in a moment a stifled cry broke from his lays, and, throwing lumself upon his knees, he thrust his arms about the dead.

Suffering as he was, he raised the body and nursed the almost severed head. He muttered heariefy, and his face was bent low till his own dripping wound shed its allegish tide to mingle with the blood of the man he had slain.

Now, in his paroxysm of awful remorse, the woman was forgotten, and he only realized the dread horror he had committed. He had slain his brother! He was a murderer! For what? At the thought he almost threw the body from him as he sprang to his feet.

"No, not not murder," he cried, in a choking voice "It was fair fight."

Then, still looking down, he drew his foot back as though to kuck the stiffening clay. But the blow did not come, and, instead, he wrung his hands at his sides like a child in distress. Harsh sobs broke tearliess from his lips, his breast heaved with inexpressible agony. Then he flung himself face downwards upon the sodden earth, and his fingers dug into the carpet of dead matter, clawing amlessly.

The afternoon was well advanced when he mound

The atternoon was well advanced when he moved agam. He core to his feet without any warning, and the change in him was staggering. Now a grant, grey-faced man locked out upon the world through eyes which burned with the light of fever. His movements were allow, deliberate. Only his eyes betrayed has condition, elling a tale of a strange new life born within him. He moved off into the woods striking down.

the slope towards the river. He was gone some time; and when he returned his face was cleaned, and a bandage was tied about it. The wound in his shoulder was not severe.

and a bandage was tied about it. The wound in his shoulder was not severe. He came none too soon, for, as he neared the clearing, he heard a succession of deep-toned wolfhowls. As he broke the forest fringe, he saw two great imber-wolves steal swiftly back to the depths whence they had just emerged

Nick cursed them under his breath. Then he went to his brother's side. Here he paused, and, after a moment of mental struggle, stooped and lifted the corpse upon his unwounded shoulder. Then with his gruesome freight he plunged into the forest.

He held the body firmly but tenderly, and walked as rapidly as his burden permitted. He often talked to himself as he went, like a man in deep thought and stirred by violent emotions. Sometimes he slowed his gait, and, at others, he almost ran. His thoughts influenced him strangely ternes he slowed his gait, and, at others, he almost ran. His thoughts influenced him strangely of the control of the control later, leaned over his dead, crooning like some woman over her child. The time passed Again he rose, and note more shootlering the body, now stiff and cold, hastened on.

And as the evening shadows gathered, and the forest gloom deepened, there came the sound of movement about him. At intervals wolfish threats were onemed and the dismal forest crise school and recticed in the hollow shadows.

His burden grew heaver. His mind suffered, and his nerves were tense as the wires of a musical instrument. Every jolk found an echoing note upon them, and each note so struck caused him exquisite pain. And now, too, the wolves grew bolder, the sent of blood was in the air and taunted their hungry belies till they began to lose their fear of the man.

Nick stopped and looked about hum. The evening stadows were fast cloung in In the gloom he saw eyes looking out upon him, eyes in pairs, like coals of fire surrounded by dark, lank, stad-owy forms. One stadow stood out more districtly than the others, and he unslang his rifle and fired postblank at it. There was a howl of pair. Then followed several fierce yelps, and stealing forms crowded theke and fast upon the creature that had batten the dust.

With a thrill of strange dread Nick shouldered his burden again and proceeded on his way. His steps were no longer steady, but hurried and uncertain. In his haste he frequently stumbled, but he seeps were no longer seeasy, our harves and incertain. In his haste he frequently stumbled, but he was strong, and he had a haunting fear of what lay behind him, and so he put forth a great effort. The twilight deepened; black shadows were everywhere shout him. Hills rose before him, and

The twilght deepened; black shadows were everywhere about him. Hille rose before him, and valleys sank away at his feet. His fancy now saw the forest crowded with prying eyes. Every treatment became a figure which stood pointing and whilepering words of demondation. And as he behald thug flootiff army of shadows his heart qualled, and the look in his eyes grew more and more fewered. He lurched on unider the cold. I clammy body without thought of his way, with nervous dews upon his forehead, and shaking limbs.

The wolves still followed. Their cries, vicious, eager, came to hun, and he have that the meal he had provided was devoured, and they hungered yet, and thirsted for the blood they scented upon the air. He sped on, staggering, and his mind grew dizey. But he knew that he had entered his valley, and

He sped on, staggering, and his nitted grew duzy. But he linew that he had entered his valley, and beyond lay the dagout which henceforth was his alone.

His untolerable burden had worn hun down. He feared it as he feared the dark shadows of hence words, and the stealing forms which trailed behind him. He loneed to throw that which he carried.

woods, do the felaling forms wass; trassec oransebam. He longed to throw that which is carried to the ground and run headlong to the abilities of the property of the control of the control of the hall handled to proper see the develop with life, a ghoodly life, and that it clung with tenacous grato the hals of the long. And the thought gree in his adrug brain that he was no longer free to do as he done, but was being dreven by the Thing he cirred. At the river he best to rid himself of the copyse. He propried to rest ere he hore it up the last hill, but the stiff arms had somehow embraced his next and dump to him. With a cry of terror he moved forward at a run. Hard on his heels came the loud-voiced throng of timberwolves.

At last, ahead, he heard the yelping of his own dogs. The noise brought him a measure of relief, for the speeding shadows belind dropped back into the woods, and their voices faded away into the tor me specuring snatows be onto tropped back into the woods, and their voices faded away into the distance.

But the corpse clung, and its weight dragged him back, to his distorted fancy the arms held his neck as in a vise. He gasped painfully as unignation told him that he was bring choled. A cold west pound down his face and set him shivering, but, like one doomed to his talk, he sped on.

Now the open stretched before him and beyond age the degent. He saw in sedge rathing to meet him; his fee firster handers. They came welcoming: then they paused uncertainly and grouped together in a cluster, and their tone suddenly changed to the short-wood paping of feet as 4 he came on then they passed uncertainly and grouped together in a claster, and their tone suddenly changed to the short-woord yapping of fear. As he cause on the called them by mann, steffing soldow in their company and in the sound of he own work. But the only response the dogs made was to mave uneasily. Their builty task drooped and hump between their legs and they turned book fearfully. Then they began to every away, disclosing in future acceptance of the control of the conlong flight, racing for home in a perfect madness of terror

And so, with horror staring from his eyes, the man who had kalled his brother came to his home

agam. Inside the but he released himself from the scy embrace of the dead man's arms, and laid the noor, cold clay upon the blankets which had been spread for the return of Aim sa. While he stood brood me over the cornse a sound reached him from behind. Turning he saw that he had left the door open, and in the opening he beheld the crowding forms of his dogs. They stood snarling fiercely, with bristling manes, their narrow-set eyes gleaming in the dusk like sparks of baleful light.

The sight set him shuddering. Then something seemed to stir within him. His heart felt like stone in his body. A coldness seemed to freeze his blood one minute, and the next in a rish came a wave of fiery passion which drove him to unthinkmy action. The veint in his head seemed to be bursting, and his brain felt as though pripped in a vise.

Out whipped his revolver, and six chambers were emptied at the figures which barred the doorway A hubbub of howls followed, then, in a moment, all became quiet. Now the doorway stood clear; the THE BATTLE IN THE WILD creatures had vanished — all but two. And these lay where they had fallen Suddenly a harsh laugh broke the stillness. But though the laugh was his, Nick's lips were unsimiing and his eyes gleamed furnously out into the meht.

173

CHAPTER XI

THE GATHERING OF THE POREST LEGIONS

NICK kicked the bodies of the two does from the doorway. Then, by force of habit, he kindled a fire in the stove, though he had no thought or desire for warmth. His action was mechanical and unheeding. Then he sat down; and, as he sat, he heard the howling of the dogs as, in chorus, they mourned their dead companions. As the noise continued the man's nerves vibrated with the hideous dole. It rose and fell, in mournful cadence, until he could stand it no longer. So he rose and reloaded his revolver. The action brought him relief. It did more: it brought him a feeling akin to 10v. And he passed out into the might.

Forceful action alone could serve him. His dread, the torture of heart and brain, found relief in the thought of taking life. A lust for slaughter was moon him He closed the door behind him, and, from the 174

atom porth, pered out beyond. The moon had past rans above the gloatly mountain pask, and sit deep, yellow light shone down over the gleaming extens in long shafts of oud life. Twenty yards away, the three basices were squatting upon the ground fazing each other, as might their blood relations, the under-wolves. Their long, sharp murdles were thrown up towards the startle basevens, and their vacues trolled deterily from their cervarious throats, further gle earl and aroungs the current out throats, further gle earl and aroungs the startle past of the control of the control of the startle past of the control of the current out throats, further gle earl and aroungs the startle past of startle past s

For a second there was a gleam of light in the darkness of the porch as the moon's rays caught the burnshed metal of the man's revolver. Then three shots rang sharply out Three hideous voxes were mistantly hushed, three bodies rolled over, falling almost side by side. The liabour of the trace would know the hushess in more.

But the man's passion was only rising. He reentered the hut, thrilled with a strange wild Joy A ferceness keapt within hum as he seated himself beside the stove and gazed over at the still form of his brother. And up out of the forest came the yelp of famished wolf and starving coyon.

The hunched figure made no move

Wild thoughts surged through his brain, thoughts which had no sequence, no continuity. He had not eaten the whole day, and though food was now to his hand he heeded it not. He was exhausted and utterly weary of body. But he sought no rest. He was living upon the vitality of his poor strained brain, sapping the tide of reason which flowed none too surely.

The time passed.

The crise of the wolves gathered force and drew nearer. The scent of blood was in the air. That night they were very bold. With muzzles thrown up they souffed at the scent they loved, and came with licking lips and frothing jowli, fighting fittedly among themselves. Nick stirred at last. He cose and took his rife. His cartridge-belt was still shout his vasist. Again be passed out to into the might. In the shadow of the posts of the shadow of the posts again, and grard upon the modificacen. Down the the hill was the darkness of the fortiers, group the the hill was the darkness of the fortiers, group the state appearance of an unfathonable pt. Above roze appearance of an unfathonable pt. Above roze the sades, whomever, growing the cold modified. Above was made at the forest. Ene the esternal smore glitted like forces. Ene the esternal smore glitted like forces that the particular state of the sades who was a substantial of the sades of the shone down upon the earth, and the still air had the sharp snap of the spring frost in it. Nick was oblivious to all but the forest cries and the crowd of stealing forms moving from the woodland shelter, and circling unward, ever nearer and nearer towards the feast which lay spread out within sight of their cruel eyes.

Nearer they drew, lean, scraggy, but withal large beasts. And as they came they often paused to send their dismal song out upon the air. Then there was a scuffle, a wicked clipping of keen fangs. Instantly the crowd packed about a fallen comrade. Then later they would scatter and continue their advance in a sort of rude skirmishing order. The man's rifle was at his shoulder, a tongue of flame leapt from its muzzle and its report rang out bitmgly. The foremost wolf fell to the earth, and the ravenous horde behind least to the banquet thus provided. Again and again the rifle spoke its sharp-voiced command, and death followed hard upon its word. At every shot a wolf went down, and the madness rose in the brain behind the eyes that looked out from the porch. Nick's craving for slaughter increased. He emotied his belt and obtained a fresh supply of ammunition, and continued to ware his fiendish warfare. And all the time wolves poured out from the woods until it seemed as if the whole race had gathered in one wast army to assail the little stronghold set high upon the hillside. It was as though Ralph's death had been the signal for the gathering of the forest creatures to avenge him.

And force and long the carrange continued. The fearance pastures was one to thin the most hardead with horror. The still night as was filled with a nanesating read, which the choose give hads the death-crack, mingling with the deep-toned bayings of ferricosus joy. But rever for one instant did the man relax his wandshiless. Never once did no reflex as though greeting to the relations to the read of the proper still a still a still a still leaps forth, and every word meant death. The moon passed its merchian and and lower

Ince moon passes its mercinan and cases cover and lower towards the western peaks; and as it lost power the stars stone more binisanity and the more than the star of the star of the star of the fastistic messure slowly, solemnly. The time of dawn stolle gradually above the eastern horizon. The man was still at his post, his unablegue geter ever withful Longer interval now ellopeat hertween his deadly shots. The worker recognised the coming of slaylely, and foreame more clarry of breaking cover. Beasels, the banquet was nearly over and every goat was grouged. Dawn grew apase. The silver of the eastern sky changed to gold, deper and deper, still the sky changed to gold, deper and deper, the symbol wright of the gold of the silver which shows down upon the cloud crusts, and miged them with the bus of Shood. Light was over the darking forests, and as it brightened the voles of the forest laground deed away in the datance, and the battle-ground was deserted of all but the author of the faceful carriage. Note wanted on his shelter midd the has ere had to the state of the same of the same passed. Then he relactantly turned lack into the H songhith on rest. H fa revered brain was na tumil? For a long time he stood heade his proteir's cropes, he his hu must stroppled to regain something of its lost balance. There came to him a bary recollerion of all that had gone efore. It was as though he stood vewering the past from some manifoldable distance. Events passed phantassissignocally before his memory, yet always their meaning seemed to tumilize and olde him.

And while he stood thus the woman leapt into the foreground of his mental peture. It was the tangible feature he needed upon which he could link the chain of recollection. Now everything became more clear. Now the meaning of his brother's dead body returned to him once more. He remembered all that had happened. His love for Aim-sa arose paramount out of the shadowed recesses of his deranged mind, and merged into that other passion which had gripped him the night long

Nor was there pity nor penitence in his mood. Remorse had passed from him. Now there was no one to stand between him and his love. He was glad that Ralph was dead. Suddenly, as stood looking down upon the still form, a harsh laugh broke from him and echoed through the stillmest of the room.

He moved away and replenished the stove; and then, returning, he wrapped his brother in the blankets on which he lay. Moving the blanketwrapped lody ande, he exposed the floor where the treasure had been buried. Suddenly he brushed his tangled nar asde from his forthead. A suhal his tangled nar asde from his forthead. A suwhich was almost a grap, escaped him. His tips moved, and he muttered audibly.

"Ay, she'll come to me agin, I guess, same as she's done before. Yes, an' it's all hers, 'cause it's all mine now By Gar! ther's a deal ther'—a mighty deal. An' it's ours. Hers an' mine."

Again he passed a hand across his forehead, and his action was uncertain, as of a man who finds it difficult to think, and having thought fails to obtam reassurance. He passed out of the hut, and presently returned with a shovel and pick

Now the tast resounded with the dull thad of the pick as it was driver deep into the Inact-modeln earth. There was a fewerth haste and unnocessary energy in the manner of his work. At first what he intended was not quite clear. He seemed to be digging at maloon. Then he lash this pick saide and pirch the shored, and gradually his putpose became plann. A long, narrow treesth was cleared, and its outline was that of a grave. Again the pick was set to work, and again the shored cleared the delirin. The ground was lard with the years to fine the pick was the stown, and again the shored cleared the delirin. The ground was lard with the years to they to a sufficient depth. But at last the grave was completed.

Nick secoed the body in its blankes throud and flang it. alto the bole. There was neither passive nor heatstancy in anything he did, only his eyes specred fortively about. As the first part of the barral was accomplished, a passic secred him and he showled the soil back as though his life depended on his speed. He packed the dry day down with his feet, nor did he rest till the grave was filled to the too.

Then he paused and wiped the sweat from his brow. The tension of his nerves was slightly re182

laxed. He went outside the hut to drank in a deep breath of the purer montan. aur before he proceeded further. And while he isold learning against the doorway he listened as though expecuing the sound of same one approaching. He scanned the outlook carefully, but there was no ago of living creature about. The wolves had gone as surely as if their visit had been a ghoutly halliscination which daraselt had dissolled.

He returned to his labours with his spirit more easy and his brain less fevered. He thought of Aim-sa and that which he meant to bestow upon her

Near by where he had barred his brother's body was the spot where the tressure had been placed for safety. Here he begin to dig. The words was you had not supply that looks, and gave be several showelful to out, and then stooged to rules to be the story of the several showelful to out, and then stooged to rules for the chest with his fingers. He have that it had been bouned only a few nuches below the surrection. Her niched long and diffigurely, but, whetever he trend i.i., the earth gave beneath the pressure of he strong fingers are yielded up any -definition, not strong fingers are yielded up any -definition that strong fingers are yielded up any -definition that the short, and a look of diagref stole into his face. He capened a water surface, thinding is had missed for the proper strong surface, thinding is had missed the short of the the spot. He dug deeper, but no chest appeared, and his look changed to one of absolute fear.

Again he raked but unfount result. Again he dag, het now deeper and deeper. Still there was no cheat, and as he widered the tole he found himself working upon the hard sool which had never before hen situatived. An aviel fee grapped himself he sought out the spot where the sool was easy He knew that this was where he had burned the citiest. He actions became hurried and more and more and more energetic. He dag fairously, exattering the artive wildy in his safery and the cut of the country of the safery and the

But all his efforts were in vain, and, after an hour's fruitless search, he flung down the shovel with a latter cy. Then he stood garing blinkly before him with eyes that seemed to scoreft in his head. His face twitched, and his hands elenched and unclenched at his sides. Then his lips parted and he gasped rather than spoke.

"It's gone!" It's

The veins at his temples beat visibly In his ears was a sound as of rushing waters. He saw nothing He scarcely knew where he was, only he was conscious of something in his head which was strained to the verse of breaking. When, at last, movement came to him, every nerve in his body seemed to draw up with a jolt, and a cry, like the roar of a maddened bull, burst from his quivering lips. He rushed headlong from the but.

184

Out into the gittering daylight he went, heedless of his course, heedless of his surroundings. He rushed down the hill and plunged into the woods. On he went, without pause, without hesitation, blindly, madly On, on, running, stumbling, slipping upon the sodden earth, tripping over projecting roots and rotting stumps.

His mind was a blank. He saw, but comprehended not; he felt, but the sense had no meanmg. He heard with clarion-like distinctness, but that which he heard sang upon his ear-drams and penetrated no further. His way was the way of the blindfold, his staring eyes beheld nothing real, he saw the name of Am-sa blazing in letters of fire before him, and a hazy picture of her lovely face. All recollection of his loss had suddenly passed from him, atterly blotted out of his thought. as though he had never known it. He knew not that he had ever had a brother whose death had been the work of his own hand. The hut behind him might never have existed, the forest about him might have been the open prairie, the sodden ground a carpet of fine texture, the snow-covered clearings CATHERING OF THE SORRET LEGIONS 18:

dusty plains, he knew nothing, nothing. He moved, ran, walked, he was a living organism without a governing power of mind

Noon came. The silent forest looked down upon his frenzied progress. The trees nodded gently in the breeze, whispering solemnly to each other in their pitving tones. Owls watched him with starupg, unmeaning eyes, deer fled as he came rushing nto the calm of their sylvan retreats. A grizzly stood erect as he passed, meditating a protest at the strange disturbance, but remained staring in amazement as the wild human figure went by, obhyrous and unbeeding The afternoon saw him still struggling, but now wearily, and in a state of collapse. His headlong course had taken the mevitable turn. He had swang round in a great circle, and was heading again for the billside where the dupout stood. Now he often fell as he went, for his feet larged and caught in every unevenness of the ground. Once he lay where he fell, and remained so long motionless that it seemed as if he would rise no more. But as the afternoon waned and the evening shadows gathered, there came the wild cries of the wolves from somewhere close behind. Though he felt no fear of them, he staggered to his feet and dragged wearsly on towards the hut. It was the forest instinct obeyed mechanically.

He came to the hut: he passed the door. Again it was habit that guided him. He kept on, and went round to the door of the lean-to. It stood wide open and he plunged within, and fell headlong upon his blankets. Nor did he stir again, only there came the sound of his stertorous breathing to indicate that he slent.

Black night closed down The forest cries awoke and their chorus rang out as the moon mounted m the heavens. The wolfish legions hovered at the edge of the woods and snuffed hungrily at the air. But the scent of blood had passed, and they came not too near

Nick's slumber of exhaustion was haunted by painful, incoherent dreams. With the curious freakishness of a disordered mind, he was beset by a vision of the dark, ferret face of Victor Gagnon The trader seemed to be hovering threateningly over his rude couch, and, behind him, less distinct, but always recognizable, was the fair Ann-sa. The whole night the sleeper was depressed by some dreadful threat which centred about the vision of these two, and when at length he awoke it was with the effect of his dreams hard mon him. The fair fresh daylight was streaming in through

GATHERING OF THE POREST LEGIONS 187 the open door Nick roused himself. He turned

onessily, theverage with the cold, for he last siege where he had fallen. Soddenly he sets up. Then with a leap the was on his feet and wele-awake, and the name of Verico Gagnoni fell from his liga. A frenzied, unreasoning desire to takes the trader's help possessed him. His body was refreshed and the blank of memory had passed from him. A glean of reason shot advant the riscoed braus. If was only for an instant, then it was gone again. But that anstant rats tooly was exercised with the states of memory and passed from him. A gloss or forecom shot had passed from him. A gloss or forecom shot states, then it was gone again. But that situational memory of the states of the states, then it was gone again. But that instantional states, then it was gone again. But that instantional conference in the states of it. Victor tember of it. Victor was the third, of it. Victor was the third, with large the should the Atter that A whose I had the should the A whose I had the should the Atter that A whose I had the should t insanity: his final loss had plunged him headlong down He was mad!

CHAPTER XII.

WHERE THE LAWS OF MICHT ALONG DESCATE

Two men occupied the half room of Victor Gagnoris store. The propentor, small, berti, with eye and then working working, and in expression on his dark face including the anapyro nature of his thoughts. He was atting with his feet on the store and and has hands speed out to the worth. The cloth of the same more and the standard of the same more and the same store of the same work of the same work of the same work of the same work of the same that the same store is the same store that the same store is the same store and t

The room was untidy. The bed stood at one end, and the tembled blankets upon it looked as though they had not been straightened for weeks. A small table supported the reasis of a frugal meal and the state of the s the floor about it was littered with food and crumbs.

Everywhere were signs of half-breed slovenliness. For some moments silence had regized. The North, that Land of Silence, makes men sparing of words and even women only talk when it is necessary. Just now, there was that between these two men which hald every thought to the main

ISSUE

Victor's attention was for the moment upon a rough-newn chest which was standing on the floor at the big man's feet.

"An' why didn't she come right along with you?"

"Mebbe cos she's smarter nor any o' us; mebbe cos I jest didn't want her to. There's somethm' 'tween you an' me, Victor, that needs some parley."
The hier man spoke quite calmly, but his very calmness was portentous.

"Smarter?" said Victor contemptuously, ignor-mg the latter part of the other's remark

"That's what I said," went on the grant, in dispassionate tones. "Davia redoned as it wa'n't jest safe to light right out lest them fellers found they'd been robbed o' their wad. She's staym' around to put 'em off'n the trail. They're dead sweet on her an' ain't lifely to 'spect who's got the stuff while she's around."

Victor nodded approvingly. His face was less angry. He knew Davis would serve him well. A silence fell again. The stove roared under the forced draught of the damper. Then the big man spoke as though he had not broken off. "But that am't only the reason, I guess. I wanted her to stay. You an' me are gom' to talk, Victor Gaenon." The trader glanced angrily at the man with the hood " See here, Tean Leblaude, you allus had a crank in ver head, an' I don't cotton to cranks anyhow."

"But you'll cotton to this," replied Jean drily " EP 2"

"It's nigh on to three year since you an' sister Davi' took on together," he went on, ignoring the interruption, and speaking with great feeling "Guess you said as you'd marry her when you was independent o' the company. It was allus the company Didn't want no married traders on their books. An' you hadn't no cash pappy. That's how you sed. Mebbe it's different now Wal?

When are you goin' to make her a de- your wife?" There was a look in Tean's eyes that brooked no denial or evasion. He had driven straight to the point, nor was there any likelihood of his drawing back.

"You're pretty rough," said Victor, with an unpleasant laugh. He was inwardly raging, but, like all men of no great moral strength, feared the direct challenge of the other.

arter, consumence to the other versions,** restored, and "leaf", "leaft, "leaf", "leaft, "leaf

"Or - what?" broke in Victor contemptuously
"Or not one blazm' cent o' the stuff in this chest'll you touch."

Victor sprang from his seat and his eyes shone furiously.

"You — you —" But his fury was baffled by the solemn, determined stars of the other. A moment more and he dropped back in his seat.

Then the great Jean lowered his eyes to the hewn chest upon the floor The lid had been forced open by the Westleys, were displayed within. Presently he looked back at the angry figure bending towards the stove

"Guess I'll out blankets out o' your store." he said.

Victor remained rapt in moody silence

"Ther' am't room fer two to sleep comfort'ble in that bed o' yourn," he added significantly, as the other showed no inclination to speak.

At last Victor looked up and the dark half-breed blood slowly mounted and flushed his narrow face. "You're gam' to stop here - wher' the stuff

1871 "I priess." The trader looked long into the cavernous moose eves of the Hooded Man while he choked down the rage which consumed him. He knew that he was a prisoner in his own store. Resistance would be utterly useless against such a man as Jean Le-No.sde In his scheme for obtaming wealth Victor had omitted to take into consideration one of the great factors of a life of wrong-doing. A man may not engage in crime with those whom he has wronged Victor had sought to obtain good service, forgetting the mainter in which he had treated the sister of Jean. The ways of the half-breed are too one in the matter of morals. Dava, he lense, loved him. Site was a strong, passionate woman, therefore he had not bothered about Jean. That Jean could possibly have secuples or feelings, tall Jean could possibly have secuples or feelings, tall from which provides of the Procher's was the mainner or which he level of the Procher's was the mainner or which he level of the Procher's was the mainner or which he had firtual thimself. But his argument were to entirely

Jean was a man strong and purposeful. He had wated long for such an opportunity, and he was not the one to forego has advantage without enforing his will. If Victor wated he has here of the opcoseds of the robbery he must fulfil the promise, which, in a passonize moment, he had bestowed Davas was as clay in his hands. Jean was fofferent, the was possessed of all the canning of the halfele was possessed of all the canning of the halfele was possessed of all the canning of the halfof view, he was a good rank, as honest man. A half-fored will hold can attemy down his trades, while yet he is a good fasher and husband, or a dunfal son. He is a most of much badoess and some good. Jean was a luttle above the average possessy that the supposition of the suppositi upon but one creature in the world, his sister Davia, that he felt strongly in her cause. He knew that, at last, he held Victor in a powerful grip, and he did not intend to relax it

Jean was as good as his word and took up his abode in Victor's store. Now would be permit the removal of the treasure under any pretext. This brother of Davak's understood the trader, he did not watch him, it was the cheet that contained the money that occupied his vigilance. Victor was resourceful and magnitude, but the stold purpose of the other defied his best schemes. He meant to get away with the money, but the bull-dog watchfulness of Jean gave him no opportunity. He was beld prisoner by his greed, and it seemed as if, in the end, he would be forced to bend to the other's will.

And no word came from Davia. No word that

And no word came from Davis. No word that could cause alarm, or tell them of the dire tragedy being enacted in the mountains. And the two men, one for ever scheming and the other watching, passed their time in moody silence.

It was the third day after the foregoing events had taken place, and midday. Victor was in the store standing in the doorway gazing out across the mighty foothills which stretched far as the eyes could reach to the east. He was thinking, casting about in his mind for a means of getting away with the money. Jean was at his post in the inner room.

WHERE LAWS OF MIGHT ALONE PREVAIL 195

It was an unbeautiful time of the year. The passing of winter in snow regions is like the moulting season of fowls, or the season when the furred world sheds its coat. The diazzling whiteness of the earth is superveded by a dirty drub grey. The snow lasts long, but its line is utterly changed. And now Yettor was looking out upon a scene that was wholly dispiriting to the mind used to the brillancy of the northern winter.

The trader's thoughts were moving along out over the stretch of country before him, for in that southeastern direction lay the town of Edmonton, which was his goal. It would be less than a fortnight before the melting anow would practically smandate the land, therefore what he had to do most be done at once. And still no feasible scheme pre sented itself:

He moved impatiently and a muttered curse excaped him. He asked houself the question again and again while his loom, resities eyes moved eagerly over the scene before him. He took a drew of tobacco and rolled it about in his month with the nervous movement of a man beset. He could hear Jean moving heavily about the room behind him, and he wondered what he was doing. But he did not turn to see

Once let lists get upon the trail with the "staff," and Jean and his sister could go hang. They would never get him, he told inhmelf: He had not lived in these latitudes for five and twenty years for nothing. But he ever came back to the pitful ad mission that he was not yel on the train, nor had be got the treasure. And time was passing Suddenly his eyes settled themselves upon a cluster of the pitful and t

tant spot beyond the creek. Something bad caught his attention, and that something was moving. The sounds of Jean's lumbering movements continued. Victor no longer heeded them. His attention was fixed upon that movement on the distant slope. And gradually his brow lectited and something

And gradually his brown lightness and something and not same layered over his features. Then he moved back to his counter, and peccuring a small moved back to his counter, and peccuring a small search of the counter of the counter per-headed Jean, the man who had dared to dictate to Victor Gagnon. The trader laughed silently, Gagnon's plan had come to him in a flash. The moment he had recognized that the company's dogtrain was approaching he had realized the timeliness of its coming. It would be at his door within an hour and a half.

Jean's voice calling him broke in upon his meditations. He was about to pass the summons by unheeded. Then he altered his mind. Better not force his gaoler to seek him. His eyes might see what he had seen, and his suspicions might be aroused if he thought that he, Victor, had seen the dog-train coming and had said nothing. So he turned and obeyed the call with every appearance of reluctance.

Fean eved his prisoner coldly as he drew up besale him

" Wal. I've waited fer you to say as ye'll marry Davi', an' ye ain't had the savvee to wag yer tongue right, I'm goin' to quit. The snow's goin' fast. They dogs o' mine is gettin saft fer want o' work. I'm gom' to light right out o' here, Victor, an' the boodle's goin' wi' me."

Jean was the picture of strong, unimaginative purpose. But Victor had that in his mind which made him hold

"Ye've held me prisoner, Jean. Ye've played the skunk. Guess you am't goin' now Neither is my share o' the contents o' that chest Savvee? If ye think o' moving that wad we're goin' to scrap. I am't no coyote."

Jean thought for awhile. His lean face displayed no emotion. His giant figure dwarfed the trader almost to nothing, but he seemed to weigh the sitvation well before he committed himself.

At last he grunted, which was his way of announcing that his decision was taken

"I'll have they dogs hitched this afternoon," he said slowly, and with meaning

"An' I'll set right here by the door," said Gagnon. "Guess the door'll let you pass, but it ain't big enough fer the chest to git through"

Victor sat fumelf down as he sard and deliberately pulled out a large revolver. Thus he land across his Bp. And then the two men eyed each other. Jean was in no way taken aback. In fact nothing seemed to pit him out of his deliberate manner. He allowed the challenge to pass and went out. But he returned almost immediately and thrust his head in through the doorway.

"Ther' won't be no need fer scrappin' yet awhile," he said. "I 'lows I've changed my way o' thinkin'. The company's dog-train is comin' up WHERE LAWS OF MIGHT ALONE PREVAIL 100 the valley, I guess. When they've gone, we'll sec."

And Victor smiled to howself when the grant had once more departed. Then he put his pistol away "Wal, that's settled," he said to himself. "The boodle stops right here. Now we'll see, Jean Leblaude, who's runnin' this layout. Ther's whiskey aboard that train. Mebbe you ain't like to fergit that. You'll taste sure. As we jest sed, 'we'll

The trader knew his man. The preat Jean had all the half-breed's weaknesses as well as a more than usual supply of their better qualities. Sober he was more than dangerous, now that he had shown his real intentions, for he was a man not Lkely to be turned from his purpose. But Victor knew his fondness for drink, and herein lay the kernel of his plan. With him it was a case of now or never. He must throw everything to the winds for that money, or be burdened with a wife he did not want, and a hmther-in-law he wanted less, with only a third of that which his greedy heart thirsted for. No. he would measure swords with Jean, and though his blade was less stout than that of the stolid grant he relied upon its superior keenness and lightness. He meant to win

The company's dog-train came up. Two sleds, each hauled by ten great huskies. They were laden down with merchandise groceries, blankets, implements, medicines and a supply of spirits, for medicanal purposes only Just the usual freight which comes to every trader in the wild. Such stuff as trappers and Indians need and are willing to take m part payment for their furs. But Victor only cared for the supply of spirits just then. He paid unusual attention, however, to the condition of the dogs.

The train was escorted by two half-breeds, one driving each sied. These were experienced hands, servants who had grown old in the service of the company Men whose responsibility began when they but the trail, and ceased when they arrived at their destination. Pierre was a grizzled veteran, and his was the charge of the journey Ambrose was his assistant. Victor understood these men, and made no delay m displaying his hospital ty when the work of an loading was completed. A ten-gallon keg of Hudson's Bay Rum was part of the consignment, and this was tapped at once by the wily trader,

The four men were gathered in the back room of the store when Victor turned on the tap and the thick brown stream gurgled forth from the cask. He noured out a tot for each of the train drivers. Then he stood uncertainly and looked over at Jean. The after had seated himself over against the stove and appeared to take little interest at what was going on. Victor stood with one foot tapping the floor impatiently. He had been quick to notice that Jean's great eyes had stolen in the direction of the little coken keg. At hat

m the direction of the little oaken keg. At last he threw the tin beaker asside as if in disgust. He played in a part consummately.

""Taint no go, toys. I'm not drinkin! Thet's what Look at him," he cried, pointing at Jean.

"We've had words, I guess. Him an' me, an' he's what Look at hm," he creed, pointing at Jean. "We've had words, I guess. Hum a'm, ea, m' he's that rided as he don't notion supplin' good thick runn wi' us. Wal, I guess ti'l keep, what you boys can't do in Ther's the paramien, ther's the keep, Jest help yourselves, lads, when yo. fancy I am't tastm' with back blood runnin' in this slack." "What, no drink?" cred old Pierre, his face bearings with old vegnilativ. "Do no lak de lum."

"What, So drink!" error our reirre, in sace bearing with oly genilatly "Do no Back de tans, Vactor What's de tans! Mebbe I task right. The old soy chusded bearing at his pleasantry. The old soy chusded bearing at his pleasantry. He was a French Canadian half-breed and spoke with a strong foreign accent. Amérous journel in the laugh.
"Ho, Jean, man," cried the latter. "No bad an' I mind you're a'mighty partial most gener'ly." Victor had started the ball rolling, and he knew that neither Pierre nor Ambrose were likely to let st rest until they had had all the rum they wanted. Everything had been made snug for the night so they only had their own pleasure to consider. As Ambrose's challenge fell upon his ears Jean looked up. His eyes were very bright and they rested longingly upon the key on their way to the driver's face. He shook his head, but there was not much decision in the movement.

Pierre seeing the action stenned up to him and shook a warning finger in his face. "Hey, you, Jean-le-gros, pig-head. We come lak Hell, four hundred mile to see you. We bring you drink, everyting. You not say 'How' We not welcome. Bah, I spit! In my Quebec we lak our frien's to come, We treat. All is theirs. Bah. I emt again." Jean looked slightly abashed. Then Ambrose chimed in. "Out of the durned way, froggy," he said, swimming Pierre aside by the shoulder, "you don't understand our ways, I guess. Ther' am't no slobberin' wi' white folk. Here you, Vic. hold out ver hand, man, and shake wi' Jean. We're goin' WHERE LAWS OF MIGHT ALONE PREVAIL 203 so her a stime to-ought, or III quat the road for verse". Then he picked up a pannikm and filled a with rum. He held a cut a his left hand towards Jean whale he offered hin qubt in token of fencidable. Jean eyed the outsteedock hand. Then he locore at the run, and the mostca-doors liked his northin. The temptation was an observable in northin. The temptation was the first one great hand into the trader's and the two must always.

et down

The armstice was declared, and Victor, in imagination, already saw the treasure his.

Now the pannion passed round merrily The room reded with the pungent odour of the spirit and all was apparently harmonious. Viztor resigned his post as dispenser of lapor to Ambroas, and began his series of stock entertainments. He drank as little as possible himself, though he could not openly shirk ha drank, and he always leep to ne ye upon Jean to see that he was well supplied, and so the time shipped by

After the first taste Jean became a different man; he laughed and jested in his slow, coarse fashion, and, with lim, all seemed good-fellowship. Pierre and Ambrose soon began to get drunk and Victor's voice, as he sang, was mostly drowned by the rolling tones of these hoary-headed old sinners as they dround out the choruses of his rongs. Now, as the merriment waxed, Victor was able to shirk his drould deliberately. Jean secret dimensional section of the secret distribution of the secret distribution, and which he sake whether the secret distribution of the se

Legon. The different supplies and left from the backper content attention upon the floor. Vector was remarked attentive upon the floor. Vector was wearied of it all, but he knew he mast see the again cot Jean's epided were drooping heavily, and he, too, seemed on the verge of collapse. Only off Pierri, hardened to the ways of has the, flagged not. Suddenly the Fernelmann saw Jean's head fortipp forward. In a moment he was on his unsteady legs and filling a passishen to the horn. He study legs and filling a passishen to the horn. He study legs and filling a passishen to the horn. He study legs and filling a passishen to the horn. ter nodded approval. Then he put it to the grant's lips. The big man supped a little of it, then, his head falling further forward, he upset the pannikin, and the contents poured upon the earthen floor. At the same time, as though utterly helpless, he rolled off his seat and fell to the ground, snoring heavily Prerre shouted his delight. Only Victor and he were left. They knew how to take their fiquor, the old hands. His pride of achievement was great. He would see Victor under the table, too, he told himself. He stood over the trader while the latter drank a bumper. Then he, himself, drank to the dregs. It was the last straw He swaved and Jurched to the outer door. There he stood for a moment, then the cold night air did for him what the rum had been powerless to do. Without warning he fell in a heap upon the doorstep as unconscious as though he had been struck dead.

Victor alone kept his head

The trader rose from his seat and stretched himself. Then, stealthily, he went the round of the prostrate men. He shook Ambrose, but could not wake him. Tean he stood over for awhile and silently watched the stem face. There was not a shade of consciousness in its expression. He bent down and touched him. Still no movement. He shook him gently, then more roughly. He was like a log: Victor grinned with a fiend-sh leer

"Guess he's fixed," he muttered.

Then he went out into the store and came to the door where old Pierre had fallen. The Frenchman was no better than the others.

"Good By Gar, Jean, my firend, I've done you," he said to humself, as, reassured, he went back to the unner room. He was none too steady humself, but he had all his wits shoat him. The chest was near the bod. He protect it ap and opened it. The treasure was there safe enough. He closed the lid and took it up in his arraw, and passed out of the store. Nor did he look back. He was anxious to be goine.

It was the chance of hus lifetime, he told bimself, as he hatened to deposit the close in the sled. Now he set about obtaining his blankets and provisions. His poliurine would be an ardiuous one, and no-lody lonew better than he the barrenness of that Northwestern land while the 'cy grop of win which had only arrived that day was returned to the sled, and some of the new blankets. Then he shipped a file and armentation.

Now was the trader to be seen in his true light. Here was emergency, when all veneer fell from him as the green coat of summer fails from the trees at the first breath of winter. His haste was not the swift movements of a man whose nerve is steady. He knew that he had at least twelve hours before any one of the three men were likely to awaken from their drunken stupor. And yet he feared. Nor did he know what he feared. And his nerves made him savage as he handled the dogs. They were living creatures and could feel, so he wantonly belted them with a club lest they should hesitate to obey their new master. The great wolfish creatures had more courage than he had, they took the unjust creatment without open complaint. as is the way of the husky, tacitly resenting it and eying with fierce, contemptuous eyes the cowardly wretch who so treated them. They slunk slowly and with down-drooped tails and bristing manes into their places in the traces, and stood ready for the word to pull. Victor surveyed them with little satisfaction, for now that all was ready to march he was beset with moral apprehensions.

He could not throw off his dread. It may have been that he feared that bleak four hundred mile journey. It may have been the lonelines when he contemplated. It may have been that he recollected the time when those whom he had robbed had saved hum from the storm, away hack there in the heart of the mountains. He shivered, and started at every night-sound that broke the stilness.

The lead dog lay down in the slopyy snow View few with summary and the slope forward, destat the poor brute a lerk that would have been sufficient to break an ordnary dog's rish. With a wicked usari the beast rose solemnly to its feet Saddenly in was cheen prinched and is started out to be sufficient to the start of the start of the solemnly to its feet to him that he had heard the some of the many and the started out to the started out to the darkness, but all seamed quite stall. He looked at the dog again. Its sarr were still principle, but they were britching uncertainly, as though not sare of the darkness where the sound had come

Victor cursed the brute and moved back to the side. The word "Mush" was howing on his lyas. Saddenly his sye channed upon the sharmbering of the side. The word "being of a being when he had fallen in the doorway. It is impossible to say what made him pause to give a second shought to those he was leaving behind. He had known Pierre for warra, and had always been as friendly as his selfish, cruid nature would permit. Perhaps some such feeling own made him bestate it. Ringst even have been his knowledge of the wild that made him view.

WHERE LAWS OF MIGHT ALONE PREVAIL 200 the helpless figure with some concern. The vagaries

of human nature are remarkable. Something held him, then he turned quickly from the sled, and, stepping up to the old man's side, stooped, and putting his arms about him, dragged him bodily into the store. Pierre did not rouse but remained quite still where Victor left him. Then the trader went out again. His back was turned as he reached to close the door. It would not quite shut and he oulled it hard. Then, as it still resisted his efforts, he turned away. As he turned he reeled back with a great cry. Something large and dark faced him And, even m the darkness, he could make out a shining ring of metal close in front of his face.

Victor's horror-stricken cry was the only sound that came. In the twinkling of an eye the metal ring disappeared. Victor felt two bony hands seize him by the throat The next instant he was hurled to the ground, and a knee was upon his chest. A weight compressed his lungs and he could scarcely breathe. Then he felt the revolver belt dragged from about his waist and his long sheath-knife withdrawn from its sheath. Then, and not till then, the pressure on his chest relaxed, and the hand that had princed his throat released its hold. The next moment he was lifted to his feet as though he were 210 //

a mere puppet, and the voice of Jean Leblaude broke harshiy upon his ears.

"Guess your bluff wa'n't with a cent, Victor Gagnon I see'd this comm' the minut you past'd me the drink. I "low ay else mostly tell a skunk by the stine. I rec'nized you awh.les back. Guess you ain I tightar,' out o' here this night. Come right along 'The trader had no choice. Jean had him foul.

grapping him with a clutch that was vise-like. The grant's great strength was irressible when put forth an the deadly earnestines of passion, and just now he could landly hold his hand from breaking the neck which was so slight beneath his sinesy fingers.

Just for one instant Victor made a faint struggle. As well attempt to resist Doom. Jean shook him like a rat and thrust him before him in the direction of the woods behind the store.

"You'll pay for this," the trader said, between his toth.

But Jean gave no heed to his impotent rage. He pushed him along in silence, nor did he pause till the secret huts were reached. He opened the door the secret huts were reactied. He opened the door of one and dragged his captive in. There was no light within. But this seemed no embarrassment to the purposeful man. He strode straight over to one corner of the room and took a long, plasted lariat from the wall. In three minutes Victor was trussed and laid upon the ground bound up like

Now Jean lighted a lamp and looked down at his victim, there was not the faintest sign of drink about him, and as Victor noticed this he cursed himself bitterly

There was an impressive silence. Then Jean's words came slowly. He expressed no emotion, no passion, just the purpose of a strong man who moves re-entlessiy on to his desired end.

Gagnon realized to the full the calamity which had befalien him "Ye'il wait right here till Davi' gits back. She's gon't to get her ears full o you. I gones. Say, she was sweet on you. — mighty sweet. But the's that seemable as it don't worry any. Say, you aim't goin't commry that again; see never meant to You're a skont, an' I'd as het choke the life out o'y as a skont, an' I'd as het choke the life out o'y as a sort Bat I'm gon't to pay; see cree than that Sarvee? Ye'll hele here till Don't comes. I'll jest full the seeman is not made till I've be desert them for this swedge my you meant till I've be desert them full the seeman is not to be a seeman in the seeman is not large exercised when I've law; "

With easy defenses I ann gagged but pursoner,

Then he glanced round the windowless shack to see if there was any weapon or other thing about that could possibly assist the trader to free himself. Having assured himself that all was safe he pit out the light and passed out, securing the door behind him.

212 IN THE BROODING WILD

CHAPTER XIII

OUT ON THE MARRIE AND TRAIT

Noos, the following day, saw the dog-train depart on its homeward journey. The way of it was curious and said much for the amplicity of these "old hands" of the northland trail. They were glants of learning in all pertaining to their calling; infants in everything that had to do with the world of men.

Thus Jean Leblaude's task was one of no great difficulty. It was necessary that he should throw dust in their eyes. And such a dust storm he raised about their simple heads that they struck the truil utterly blinded to the events of the previous might. While they yet stumbered Jean had freed the fores from their transes and unlouded the seld which deep from their transes and unlouded the seld which dogs from their traces, and unloaded the sled which bore the treasure-chest. He had restored everything to its proper place, and so he awaited the coming of the morning. He did not sleep; he watched, ready for every emergency.

When, at last, the two men stirred he was at hand Rolling Pierre over he shook him violently till the old man sat up, staring about him in a daze, A beaker of rum was thrust against his parched lips, and he drank greedily. The generous spirit warmed the Frenchman's chilled body and roused him. Then Jean performed the same merciful operation upon Ambrose, and the two unrepentant sinners were on their legs again, with racking heads, and feeling very ill.

But Tean cared nothing for their sufferings, he wanted to be rid of them. He grave them no chance to question him: not that they had any desire to do so, in fact it was doubtful if they fully realized anything that was happening. And he launched into his carefully considered story "Victor's gone up to the hills 'way back ther',"

he said. "Ther's been a herd o' moose come down. from the moose-yard, further north, an' he's after their pelts. Say, he left word fer you to git right on loadin' the furs, an' when we bit the trail ve're to take three bottles o' the Rve, an' some o' the rum, He says he ain't like to be back fer nigh on three days."

And while he was speaking the two men supped their coffee, and, as they moustened their parched and burning throats, they nodded assent to all Jean had to say At that moment Victor, or any one

OUT ON THE NORTHLAND TRAIL 215 else, mucht go hang. All they thought of was the awful thirst that assailed them Breakfast over, the work of loading the sleds proceeded with the utmost dispatch. Thus it was that at noon, without question, without the small-the weary "long trail."

est suspicion of the night's doings, they set out for fean saw them go. He stood at the door of the store and watched them until they disappeared behand the rising ground of the great Divide. Then his solemn eyes turned away indifferently, and he gazed out into the hazy distance. His gaint face showed nothing of what was passing in the brain behind it. He rarely displayed emotion of any sort The Indian blood in his years preponderated, and earth of the storal calm of the Redskin was his Now he could wast, undisturbed, for the return of Davis. He felt that he had mastered the saturation. He could not make Victor marry the sister he had wronged, but at least he could pay off the wrong in his own way, and to his entire satisfaction. Two years he had waited for the adjustment of these matters. He was glad that he had exercised patience. He might have slain Victor a hundred times over, but he had refrained, vainly hoping to see his sister righted. Besides, he knew that Davia had loved Victor, and women are peculiar. Who might say but that she would have fled from the murderer of her lover? Tean felt well satisfied on the whole. So he stood thinking and waiting with a calm mind

But the tragedy was working itself out in a manner little suspected, little expected, by him. This he was soon to learn.

hand, only was the wood-lined hill, which stretched away to the right and left of him, and behind the but, have of the wintry nall. The sky was brilliant

The grey spring snow spread itself out on every in contrast with the greyness of the world beneath st, and the sun shone high in the blue vault. Everywhere was the deadly calm of the Silent North. The presence of any moving forest beast in that brooding picture, however distant, must surely have caught the eye. There was not a living thing to he seen. These worful wastes have much to do with the rugged nature of those who dwell in the north. Suddenly the whole prospect seemed to be electrified with a thrill of life. The change came with a swift movement of the man's quiet eyes. Nothing had really altered in the picture, nothing had apneared, and yet that swift flash of the eyes had brought a suggestion of something which broke up the solitude as though it had never been. Awhile, and his attention became fixed upon the long line of woods to the right. Then his ears caught a slight but distinct sound. He stood away from the doorway, and, shading his eyes from the sunlight, tooked keenly along the dark shadow of the woods. No wolf or for could have keener instinct than had this man. A sound of breaking brush, but so slight that it probably would have passed unheeded by any other, had told him that some one approached through these woods. He waited.

Suddenly there was movement in the shadow. The next moment a figure stepped out into the open. A figure, dressed in beaded buckskin and blanket clothing. It was Davia.

She came in haste, yet wearily. She looked slight and drooping in her mannish garments, while the pallor of her drawn face was intense. She came up to where year stood and would have fallen but for his empour. Her issuement had been said and for his support. Her journey had been rapid and long, and she was utterly weary of body "Qunck, let's git inside," she cried, in a choking voice. Then she added hysterically: "He's on the voice. Then she added hysterically: "He's on the trail."

Without a word Jean led her into the house,

Without a word Jean led her into the house, and she flung herself into a seat. A little whiskey put new life into her and the colour came back to

912 IN THE RECODING WILD her face. She was strong, a woman bred to hardship and toil Jean waited, then he put a question with characteristic abruptness.

" Who's on the trail?" "Who? Nick Westley He's comm' for blood!

Victor's blood!" Then Davia sprang to her feet with a look of wild alarm upon her beautiful face. "He's killed his brother!" she added. "He's mad ravin' mad." The man did not move a muscle Only his eyes darkened as he heard the announcement. " Mad." he said, thoughtfully " An' he's comin' fer Victor. Wai?" Davia sat up. Her brother's calmness had a soothing effect upon her.

"Listen, an' I'll tell vou,"

And she told the story of the mountain tragedy. and the manner in which she watched the madman's subsequent actions until he set out for the store.

And the story lost none of its intense horror in her telling.

Jean listened unemotionally and with a judicial air. Only his eyes showed that he was in any way moved. When she had finished he asked her, "An'

when'll he gut here?"

"Can't say," came the swift reoly, "Maybe to-night; maybe in an hour; maybe right now. He's ber an' strong, an' - an' he's mad. I know st." And a shudder of apprehension passed over her frame.

"Fer Victor? Sure?" Jean asked again presently, like a man weighing up a difficult problem. "Sure He don't know you, nor me, at this layout. Ther's only Victor I guess I don't know how he figgered it, he's that crazy, but it's Victor he's layin' fer, sure. Say, I saw him sling his gun an' his 'six.' An' his belt was heavy with ammunation. I reckon ther's jest one thing fer us to do when a crazy man guts around with a gun. It's time to light out. Wher's Victor?" And her eyes fell upon the treasure-chest " Him an' me's changed places. He's back ther' " Jean serked a thumb over his shoulder to indicate the huts in the wood. Davis was on her feet in an instant and her eves sparkled angraly. "What d'ye mean, Jean?"

The man shrugged. But his words came full of anger.

"He didn't mean marryin' ve."

"Well?" The blue eyes fairly blazed.

"The boodle," with a giance in the direction of the treasure. "He was fer jumpen' the lot." " Hab! An! -- 2"

220

And Tean told his story And after that a silence fall "It's cursed - it's blood-money!" Davia's voice was hoarse with emotion as she said the words. Jean started.

"We're goin' to git," he said slowly. And he looked into the woman's eyes as though he would read her very soul.

"An' Victor?" said Davia harshiy "Come, we'll go to him."

At the door Davia was sezed with an overwhelming terror She grupped Jean's arm forcefully while she peered along the woodland france. The man listened. "Let's git on quick." Davia whispered. And her mouth was dry with her terror They found Victor as Jean had left him. The prisoner looked up when the door opened. His eves brightened at the sight of the woman No word was spoken for some moments. In that silence a drama was swiftly working strelf out. Victor was calculating his chances. Davia was thinking in a loving woman's unreasoning fashion. And Jean was watching both. At last the giant stooped and removed the gag from his captive's mouth. The questioning eyes of Victor Garnon looked from one to the other and finally rested upon Dayra.

" Wal?" he said

And Davia turned to Jean, "Loose hun!" she said imperiously.

And Jean knew that trouble had come for his plans. He shook his head. The giance of Victor's eyes as they turned upon Jean was like the edge of a super-sharpened knife. The trader knew that a crisis had arrived. Which was the stronger of these two, the brother or the sister? He waited, "What are you goin' to do with him?" Davia asked.

She could scarcely withhold the anger which had risen within her

But lean did not answer, he was listening to a strange sound which came to him through the open door Suddenly he stooped again and began to readjust the rope that held his prisoner. He secured hands and feet together in a manner from which Victor was not likely to free himself easily; and yet from which it was possible for him to get loose Davia followed his movements keenly. At last the grant rose; has task was completed

"Now," he said, addressing them both. "Say your says - quick."

"You ain't leavin' him here," said the woman, looking squarely into her brother's eyes. "That's so"

A strange light leapt into Davia's eyes. Jean saw it and went on with a frown.

"I'm easy, dead easy; but I guess I've had enough. He'd shift for himself. If he'd 'a' acted straight ther'd 'a' been no call for me to step in. He didn't He am't settin' you right. Days', he can't even act the thief decent. He'd 'a' robbed you an' me, an' left you what you are. Wal, my way goes."

Then he turned to Victor and briefly told him Davia's story of the mountain tragedy. As he came to the climax the last vestige of the trader's msolence vanished. Nick was on his way to the store armed and - mad. Panic seized upon the listener. His brayado had ever been but the veneer of the surface. His condition returned to the subversive terror which had assailed him when he was caught in the mountain blossard

"Now, see you here. Victor." Tean concluded coldly, yet watching the effect he had produced, "Ye owe us a deal more'n ve ken pay easy, but I'm fixm' the reckonin' my way We're goin', an' the boodle goes wi' us. Savvee?" Davia watched her brother acutely. Nor could she help noticing that the great man was listening while he spoke.

her krother acutely. Nor could the hist noticing that the great man was laterium while he spoke.

"I lows you'll gif free o' this rope. I mean ye work you'll gif free o' this rope. I mean ye have been a spoke of the country and the spoke of the country and the spoke of the spok big sight."

Jean finished up with profound emphasis. Then he turned about and faced his sister

"Now, gal, we're goin' "
"Not while Victor's left here."

"Not while Victor's left he

Jean stood quite still for a moment. Then his rage suddenly broke forth.

"Not while that skunk's left?" he cried, pointing scornfully at the prostrate man. "Ye'd stop here fer him as has sharned ye; him as 'ud run from ye this munt if he had the chance, him as

'ud rob ye too, him as thinks as much to ye as a coyote. Slut y' are, but y' are my sister, an' I say ye shall go wi' me."

He made a step towards her Then he brought up to a halt as the long blade of a knule gleamed before his eyes. But he only hesitated a second. His great hand went out, and he caught the woman's wrist as she was about to strike. The next instant he had wrenched the weapon from her grasp and held her.

Now he thrust her out of the but and secured the door. He believed that what he had done was only right.

As they passed out into the bright spring daylight again a change seemed to come over Davia Her terror of Nick Westley returned as she noted the alert attitude of her brother. She listened too, and held her breath to intensify her bearing. But Jean did not relax his hold upon her till they were once more within the store. Then he set her to assist in the preparations for their flight. When all was ready, and they stood outside the house while Iean secured the door. Davia made a final appeal. "Let me stop. Jean," she cried, while a sob broke from her. "I love him. He's mine." "God's curse on ve. no!" came the swift response, and the man's eves blazed Suddenly a long-drawn cry rose upon the air

It reached a great pitch and died lingeringly away It was near by and told its tale. And the woman shuddered involuntarily. It was the wolf cry of the mountains; the cry of the human. And, as if in answer, came a chorus from wolfish throats, The last moment had come.

Davia caught Jean's arm as though seeking protection.

"I will go," she cried, and the man took her answer to be a final submission.

The stillness of the day had passed. Lafe thrilled the air although no life was visible. Davia's fear was written in her face. Jean's expression was inscrutable, only was it sure that he listened.

But Iean was not without the superstitious dread which madness inspires. And as they raced, he bearing the burden of the treasure-chest, for the wood-covered banks of the creek, he was storred to horror by the familiar sounds that pursued him. It was their coming, at that time, in daylight; and in answer to the human cry that had first broken up the silence of the hills. How came it that the legions of the forest were marching in the wake of that other upon the valley of Little Choveuse

Tean halted when they stood upon the rotten ice of the creek. Now he released his sister, and they stood facing each other well screened from view from the store

The sullen peace of the valley had merged into the deep-toned, continuous howl of hoarse throats.

226

A terrible threat was in the sound. Jean unslung hts rifle and looked to his pistol.

"Ther's six in this gun," he said deliberately. "Five of 'em is fer them beasties, if ne'sary The other's fer you if you git playsn' tricks. Mebbe ve'll thank me later fer what I'm dom'. It don't cut no figger anyway " Then he prodded the see with his iron-shod staff, Davis watched him while she listened to the din of the forest world. At length the staff had beaten its way to the water below. "What are ye doin'?" she asked, quite suddenly And Jean's retort was a repetition of her own words. " it's cursed - it's blood-money!" She took his meaning, and her cupidity cried out in revolt But her protest was useless. "You're not goin' -- " she began.

"It goes," cried Jean fiercely, "wher' he am't like to touch it. 'less Hell gits him Father Lefleur. at the mussion, says as gold's Hell's payer', an' mebbe this'll git back wher' it come." And with vengeful force he threw back the lid of the chest. Davia's eyes expressed more than any words could have told. She stood silently by, a mute but eloquent protest, while Jean took the huge of gold dust one by one from the cleat, and poored their contents and the water below. When the last long was empreed be cost, the peaket of balls and fingers and the protection of the peaket of the second protection of the peaket of the second protection. The protection of the peaket of the second protection of protection of the peaket of the second protection. The Suddenly he through them too the bole, and he staff threat viscously at them as he punded them under the less where they would quarkly rot. It

227

"Rebbe the water'll wash the blood off'n it," he exclaimed. "Mebbe" Daua's eves looked densively upon the mant

figure as he straightened himself up. She could not unterstand. But her look changed to one of horror a moment later, as above the cries of the forest rose the in human acte of the madman. Both recognized it, and the dreadful tone gripped their hearts. Jean leant forward, and seizing the woman by the arm dragged her off the lose to the cover of the besh.

dragged her oft the foe to the cover of the bush. With hurried strides they made their way through the leafless branches, until they stood where, themselves well under cover, they had a view of the store.

CHAPTER XIV.

WHO SHALL PATHOM THE DEPTHS OF A WOMAN'S LOVE?

The dull woods look black in the bright sunight; and beyond, and above, the crystal of the sternal snow gleans with appalling whiteness. No touch of spring can grey those barren, everlasting fields, where foot of man has never trod, and no warmth can penetrate to the rock-bound earth benesth.

All the world seems to be reaching to the sky vault above. Everything is vast; only is the work of human hands puny

Thus the old log storehouse of Victor Gagnon, now shut up Ike a descreted fort of older days, with out its suckade, is less than a terrier's kennel set at the door of a grant's cauth. And yet it breaks up the solitude so that something of the sarage maguit-ence is gone. The forest cries echo and rekcho, and, to human ears, the savage din is full of portentious meaning, but it is lost beyond the confines of the valley, and the silent guardians of the peaks above steen on undisturbed.

A mighty flock of water-fowl speeding their way,

droop downwards, with craning necks, at the unusual sounds, to watch the stealing creatures moving at the edge of the woods. The fox, hungering as he always hungers, foremost, lest other scavengers, like humself, shall steal the prize he seeks: a troupe of broad-antiered deer racing headlong down the valley: shappy wolves, grey or red, lurking within the shadow, as though fearing the open daylight. or perhaps him whose voice has summoned them;

these things they see, but their meaning is lost to the feathered wanderers, as they wang their way onward The cry of the human floats over the tree-tops and beats itself out upon the solemn hillsides. It has in it a deep-toned note of invitation to the fierce denizens of the forest. A note which they cannot resist, and they answer it, and come from hill and valley, gathering, gathering, with hungry bellies and frothing jowls.

Driving his way through close-growing bush comes the unkempt figure of a man. A familiar figure, but so changed as to be hardly recognizable. His clothes are rent and scored by the horny branches. His feet crush noisily over the pine-cones 230 in moccanine that have rated from his feet with tix pointing over all those a special registration. There is a quivering fire birring in his eyes, as current as high, the sam's reflections upon rip-plage water. He looks mether this way not this, yet his eyes seem to fee flashing in all directions at once. The bloody arar upon his check is directful to look upon, for it has scarce beginn to heal, and the cold has got into it. He is armed, as Davin had ad, thus strange borrife figure, and at intervals his head is thrown back to give tonger to his wolf the cyll. I allow revenue at the Spant of the

He pormeys on through the twist gloom. The horrer of the lig gatherd about his is no more grun than is the condition of his wittless brain horrer of the lig gatherd about him is no more grun than is the condition of his wittless brain of his many than the condition of his wittless brain gather with though those; proving party and along winding tracks made by the forest lords; now pushing like as ferces shadow among the bare, primeval ing like as ferces shadow among the bare, primeval restrictants, he moves forward. File goal is about, and one installed, one desero, urges him onward. He knows nought of his surroundings, he sees nought. Ha chaotic brain is aware only of its mad purpose.

Suddenly the bush parts. There stands the store of Victor Gagnon in the bright light of day Swift touch, and he passes within. Then follows a cry that has in it the tone of a buffed creature robbed of its prey, it is like the night cry of the puma that abrinks at the blaze of the camp-fire; it is frece, terrible. The house is empty. But the cumming of the madinan does not desert him. He sets out to search, perring here, there, and everywhere. As the moments pass, and no living thing is to be seen within, his anger rises like a ferrer surriner form. He stands in the centre of satifis. His eyes light upon the woodnt trap which opens upon the caller where Vefor stores hus sleans. Once more the fire flares up in his cleanful eyes. An oil lamps in gone a shell: He dashes towards it, and soon as dull, yellow flame sheds it feelbe rays and soon as dull, yellow flame sheds it feelbe rays of wood. Below seen the top range of a rough about He storops and prises up the heavy square of wood. Below seen the top range of a rough the store of the shed with the store of the shed with the

the store which is filled with a disordered array of

All is alent again except for the shuffling of his almost bare feet upon the uneven ladder. The last 232

Then, for awhile, silence resens,

During that silence there comes a figure stealing round the angle at the back of the building. It is a slight, dark figure, and it moves with extreme caution. There is a look on the narrow face which as one of superstitious horror. It is Victor Gagroon escaped from his prison, and he advances haltungly, for he has seen the approach of his uncarmy visitor, and he knows not what to do. His inclination is to flee, yet is he held fascinated. He advances no further than the front angle of the building, where he stands shaking with nervous apprehension.

Suddenly he hears a ery that is half-stifled by distance, for it comes from the depths of the cellar within. Then follows a metallic clatter of something falling, which, in turn, is followed again by a cry that is betwixt a fierce exclamation of joy and a harsh laugh. A foreboding wrings the heart of the half-breed trader Now he listens with every sense aiding him, and a strange sound comes to his ears. It is a sound like the rushing of water or the sighing of the wind through the skeleton branches of forest-trees. It grows louder, and, in its midst, he hears the stumbling of feet within the house. Something, he knows he remains at his post. He dare not move. At last he thrusts his head forward and peers round the corner so that he has a full view of the door Then he learns the meaning of the sound he has heard. Great clouds of smoke are belching through the opening, and are rolling heavily away upon the chill, scented air. His jaws come together. his breath catches, and a look that is the expression of a mind distracted leans into his eyes. He knows that his store is on fire. He does not leave his lurking-place, for he knows that there is no means of staying the devouring flames. Besides, the man must still be within. Yes, he is certainly still-within the building, for he can hear him. The cries of the wild come up from the forest but Victor no longer breds them. The hiss and crackle of the burning house permeate his brain

His eyes watch the smoke with a dreadful fascination. He cannot think, he can only watch, and he is gripped by a more overwhelming terror than ever. Suddenly a fringe of flame pursues the smoke from the door. It leaps, and rushes up the woodwork of the thatch above and shoots along to the pitch of the roof. The rapidity of the mighty tongues is appalling. Still the man is within the building, for Victor can hear his voice as he talks and laughs at the result of his handlwork. The madman's voice rises high above the roar of the flames. The fire seems to have driven him to the wildest pitch of insensate excitement, and Victor begins to wonder what the end will be

234

A moment later he hears distant words come from the burning house. They come in a shout that is like the roar of some wild beast, and they sound high above every other sound. There is in them the passionate ring of one who abandons all to one overpowering desire.

"Aim-sa! Aim-sa! Wait, I'm comut"

There is an instant's silence which the sound of the hungry flames devours. Then, through the blazing doorway, the great form of Nick Westley rushes headlong, shouting as he comes. " Aim-sa! Am-sa!" The cry echoes and reechoes, giving fresh spirit to the buying of the wolves that wait in the cover of the woodland. On rushes the man heedless of the excoriating roughnesses of the ground beneath his hare and battered feet. He gazes with staring eyes upon the woods as though he sees the vision of the woman that has inspired his cry On, he speeds towards the beasts whose chorus welcomes him; on, to the dark woods in which he plunges from

Jean Leblaude, standing within cover of the woods which lined the creek, was loat to all sight and sound other than the strange scene enacted at the store. Once or twice he had spoker, but it was more to himself than to Davia, for he was engrossed by what he beheld.

But now, as he saw the man rash with framehate and chappear within the woods, he thought of the wealth of stons within the burning booss of the wealth of stons within the burning booss arreparable. He loved the noth fars of the North and any woman loves her bounding days. As for the store, that was little to him except that Victor was now permisted even beyond in, Jean's, hopes. He would be as it always was in the wid. The valley would be as it always was in the wid. The valley would be as it always was in the wid. The valley

But he watched Victor curiously. He saw him stand our before the wreek of his store, and a world of despar and dejection was in his attitude. A mighty bitterness was in the great Jean's heart for the man he gazed upon, and a sense of triumphant joy flashed through him at the sight. "See" he sade, whotous tumner from his contemplation, and pointing with one arm outstretched "He's paid, an' paid bad. The teachin's come to him. Maybe he's learned."

There was no reply, and he went on,

" Maybe he's wishin' he'd treated you right, Days', Maybe he'd gi' something to marry you now

Maybe Wal, he's had his chance an' throw'd it." There was an impressive pause. Presently Jean spoke again "Guess we'll be gittin' on soon. The mission's a good place fer wimmin as hasn't done well in the world, I reckon. An' the Peace River's nigh to a garden. I 'lows Father Lefleur's a straight man, an'il set you on the right trail. Days' Yes, I guess we'll be gettin' on " Still there was no answer Suddenly the grant swung round and looked at the spot where Davia had been standing. She had vanished And Tean sofemp-eved as any moose, stared

standly at the place where her feet had rested. He stood long without moving, and slowly thought straightened itself out in his uncouth brain. He began to understand. The complexity of a woman's character had been an unknown quantity to him But he was no further from understanding them than any other man. Now an inner consciousness told him that the punishment of Victor had been the undoing of his schemes. Davia had seen the trader bereft of all, homeless, penniless, and she had gone to hum.

The turned back at last and looked towards the store, it was almost humton in now. But he beded to truth of, for he saw two figures in deep converse, close by, in the open, and one of them was a woman As he watched he saw. Dava spas a stage pastol to the man, and then he lense that her love for her faithful sold was greater than any other passion that moved her. He knew that that weapon had been given for defence against humsless.

been given for defence against himself.
That evening the setting gui abore down upon a solitary camp-fire on the Northland trial, and beside it stat a large man crosching for warmfit. He was smoking, and as he smoked he thought much All the days he had lived he had never known a woman's love. He muttered as he kocked the statist of his fire together, and spat into the blaze as & leagt up

"Maybe it's a fine thing Maybe they're queer criturs Mostly saft an' gentle an' -um — I wonder —"
The sun sank abruptly, and the brief twilight gave place to a night that was little less than day. The northern lights danced their mystic measure in the starlit vault to the piping of the Spirit of the North. 238 IN THE ERODDING WILD

The hush of the Silent Land was only broken by the crees which came up from the dark valleys and the crees which came up from the dark valleys and darker forests. And the lonely giant, Jean Leblaude, slept the light stumber of the journeyer in the wild; the slumber that sees and hears when danger is abroad, and yet rests the body. He dreamed not, though all his schemes had gone awry, for he was vestry.

CHAPTER YV

THE TRACEDY OF THE WILD

"Azm-sa! Am-sa! I come!"

The cry rings against the mountainsides, shuddering and failing, then it is lost in the vastness, like the sound of a pebble pitched into rushing waters. The woodland chorus takes it up in its own wolfish tongue, and it plunges forth again, magnified by the chin of a thousand echoes.

magnified by the das of a thousand echoes. High up to the lair of the mountain hon it rases; where the mightly erags, throne-like, o'exhadow the lesser woods; where the royal beast, larding it over an inferior world, stealthily provide and lashes its angry tail at the impudence of such a disturbance in its vata domain. Its basilisk starte looks out from its furtive, droughing head, and its commands ring out in a roar of mignificent displessure.

Even to loftier heights still the cry goes up; and the mighty grey eagle ruffles its angry feathers, shakes out its vast wings, and screams invective in answer to this loud-voiced boast of wingless creatures. Then, in proud disdain, it launches itself out upon the air and with a mighty swoop downwards. screaming defiance as its outstretched pinions brush the sleek coat of the mountain hon, it passes on over the creaking tree-tops to learn the real cause of the herbberk

Down the valley, away to the east, the timed deer gather, snuffing at the breeze, fearful, protesting, yet fascinated. The caribon pauses in his headlong race to listen, only, a moment later, to speed on the faster "Aim-sa! Aim-sa! Wait, I come!"

The cry is more muffled. The dark canopy of forest deadens it, tall the sound as like a voice erving out from the depths of the earth. For the man is travelling with the fierce directness of one who is lured on by the haunting vision of that which is his whole desire. The riven mountains have no meaning for him. He looks straight out nor tree trunk, nor bush, nor nature rock hars his vision, there beyond, ever beyond, is that which alone he seeks, It moves as he moves; beckoning, calling, smiling But always, like a will-o'-the-wisp, it eludes him. and draws forth the cry from his throat. The sweet, mocking face, the profound blue eyes, sparking with laughter or broading in perfect seriousness, the parted has about the glistening teeth so like a soft curtain of wondrous texture falling in delicate folds upon rounded shoulders -- these things he sees. Always ahead the vision speeds, always beyond. The man's efforts avail nothing

The wolves upon his trail lope slowly over the forest bed of oozing vegetation, with careless stride, but with relentless intent, the creatures openly seek their prey. For blood is upon the air, and they come with the natter of thousands of feet, singing their dolorous chorus with all the deep meaning of the savage primordial heast. But the man heeds them not. He is deaf to their raucous song as he is blind to the mighty encompassing hills. What cares he if the earth links up with the blue heavens above him? What cares he for the everlasting silence of those heights, or the mute Sourits which repose upon the sey beds of the all time glaciers? He is beyond the knowledge of Storm or Calm. He knows nought of the meaning of the awesome voice of Nature. The vision is all to him, and he gazes upon it with hungry, dreadful eyes. His heart is starving; his mind is empty of all but the panes of his all-mastering desire. If need be he will pursue to the ends of the earth. He has been to the depths of hell for her: he has felt the withering blast of aiou, possession of the woman he seeks,

To his distraught fancy, his cries receive answer, and he stumbles blindly on. Meanwhile the wolves draw ever nearer and nearer, as their courage rises in response to the voice of their famished bellies. So the strange pursuit goes on, on, over hills and through valleys, now scaling barren, snow-clad rocks, now clambering dreamly down jagged rifts of earth, over Nature's untrodden trails, or along beaten paths made by the passage of forest beasts. Through clearing and brake, and over the rotting ice which fills the bed of the mountain torrent. On, on into Nature's dim recesses, where only the forest creatures lord it, and the feet of man have never been set

At length the forests disappear and the magnificent heights rear their snowy crests thousands of feet skywards. The valleys are left, and behind him and below the forests form but a dark shadow of little meaning. The prestness is about him, the magnitude of the higher mountain world. As he faces the unfathomed heights he again treads the snow, for the warm embrace of Spring has not yet enfolded the higher lands, and the gracious influence of the woods is no longer to be felt.

He pauses, breathing hard, and the expression of his wounded face is not pleasant. The flesh is blue, and the eyes are as fierce as the crouching puma's. He looks about him as one in a daze. The baying of the wolves cones up from below. They still dog him, for the blood trail bolds then fast. A ledge stretches away, winding upwards, a mass of tumbled rode foot one towering, solitary pine, and beyond is blank snow For the moment he is lost, his vision has deserted him It may be that weariness has overcome the power of his iliusion, for he stares vacantly about. He looks back, and the breadth of what he sees conveys no meaning. The woods, with the sound of life coming up to him in deadly monotony of tone, the hills, beyond, rising till the sun, like a hall of deep red fire, seems to rest apon their now furid glacial fields, but is powerless to break their tcy bondage, these things he sees but heeds not Beyond, far into the hazy distance, stretch hills in their hundreds, incalculable, remote, all bearing the ruddy tint of sunset; a ghostly array, chaotic, overwhelming to the brain of man. But the scene has no significance to him. His eyes are the eyes of a man dead to all but the illusion of a disordered brain. He sees as one partially blanded by the sun. Suddenly he starts. A sound such as he craves has come to him again. He wheels to the right, whither the ledge winds round the crag. He peers out, again he sees, and with a cry he rushes on. A moving figure is upon the road, a smiling figure,

a beckoning figure

244

Up rises the way, a toilsome path and rugged, slippery and biting to the unshed feet. He feels no pain, there is the figure. He presses on, and the hungry legions move out from the forest below and follow boldly upon his trail. He rounds the bend The call trembles down the mountainside, and its music is strangely sooth ing and sweet to his ears. Quite abruptly a broad plateau spreads out before him. It is edged on one side by a sheer drop to animaginable depths, on the other the uprising craps overhang in horrible menace. The plateau is strewn with bleaching bones, and from beneath the overhanging rocks comes a fetid stench. Now the figure is lost again, and the dreadful straining eyes search value for the fair face and beckoning hand. His heart labours and great pain is in his chest. For he is high up in the mountain air, and every breath is an effort Nor does he see the crouching object to his right, lyme low to the ground, with muscles autvering and eyes shooting green fire upon him. There is no movement in the savage body but the furious, noiseless lashing of the tail, and the bristling of the barr at its shoulders. But suddenly a strange thing happens. The creature shrinks back, and draws slowly away. Its awful eyes are averted as though in a fear it is powerfess to contend with Its anger is jot in an arrant cowardice, and the beast slinks within a low-monthed cavern. What is it that has cover to nut fear into the heart of

Its anger is lott in an arrant cowardice, and the beast fullisk within a low-mouthed cavern. What is it that has power to put fear into the heart of the monatroad for the monatroads, rulies it is the made of the monatroad for the monatroad rulies. It is the made of the monatroad for the man force on unconscious of any lurifung danger. As the passes, the special of his presence passes also. A roar comes from the depths of the curvern, and is answered by the workers as they crowd cavern, and is answered by the wolves as they crowd up to the edge of the plates. But though their reply is both they beating to advance further. For both they beating to advance further are both they beat the plate of the plate of the plate at the air with muratles up-thrown, and their many; coats brustle with sullen anger. The crowd increases, the courage of the coward begins to rise within them. A ferre argument areas, and the debate takes the form of a volcous dipping of harge upward to the plate of the plate of the plate of the new them.

reigns

Then as if by chance, one great dog-wolf is driven out upon the battle-ground. He is a leader, high ast upon the battle-ground. He is a leader, his or shoulder, broad of cleas, with jaws like the profage of a treg, and lines that are to lease that the muscles stand out upon them like losts of rope. And his action as a ugual to the crowd of awayes politoons behind. With one accord they send there force bettler; only upon the still are, and lesp, like the rinh of an avaluadie, to the law of the man him. Out from his alther sprong the royal standards and the still are the standards of the Silde by adde they stand, ready for the battle though the odds he a million to one signant law.

246

Their sleek bodies are a-quiver with rage, their tails whip the earth in their fury, while their eyes, like coals of green fire, shine with a malevolence such as no words can describe.

Again the wolves bearints. Their outstretched halls droop and are pressed between the elgy, their backs are hunched, and they turn their long, amortow heads from the group glister of the two pairs of terrible eyes. But the pause is brief, and the modes has died only for a second. One wolf moves a step forward, hunger overpowering his feats. As before, it is a signal. The wolved pack hap to the fray; strugglang, howing, fighting as they come riping at comme pairs again. The wolved farm the sawift, to owith that it is almost impossible to realize that it is own. The pack, leaping and buying.

pass on, following the blood trail of the man, leaving more bones upon the plateau, more blood upon the trodden snow, and the royal dwellers of that httle plain have vanished as though they had never been.

The path has taken a downward slope and the man looks ahead for the fair face, hungrily, fevershly Again it has vanished. His heart cree out bitterly, and his despairing voice echoes through the barren hills. As he advances the nath declines lower and lower.

till out of the shadowy depths the tree-tops seem climbing to meet him. The air he breathes is denser now, and respiration is easier. As the path declines its mountainous sides rise higher and higher until overhead only a narrow streak of sley is revealed, like a soft-toned ribbon set in a background of some dun-coloured material. Ahead is a harrier of snow and ice, while below him, down in the depths of the gorge, the earth is clear of the wintry pall and frowns up in gloomy contrast The sparse vegetation, too, has changed its appearance. Here towers the silent, portentous pine, but of a type vaster than can be seen in any other corner of the earth. The man hastens on with all the speed his weary limbs will permit, stumbling as he goes, for the frost of the high altitudes has entered his hones, and he cannot now feel the touch of the broken earth. But his yearning heart is ceaseless in its despairing cry. Where - where is

She? The trees come up higher and higher and the gloom closes in upon him as he reaches the barrier Now he pauses under a mighty archway Below, it is black with age and full of crowding shadows, the superstructure alone is hung with snowy frost curtains, and these help to emphasize the forbiddung nature of the dark, narrow under-world

Down, down he goes, as though he were journeyme to the very bowels of the earth, heedless of the place, herdless of all but the phantom he seeks. Again his surroundings have changed. The barrenness is emphasized by skeleton-like trees of such size as no man has ever seen before. High up aloft there is foliage upon them, but so measure so torn and wasted as to suggest a wreck of magnificent life. These gigantic trunks are few in number, but so huge that the greatest elm would appear a appling beside them, and yet their wondrous size would not be properly estimated. They are the primordial pines, survivors from an unknown period. They shelter nothing but harrenness, and stand out alone like solemn sentries, the watchmen for all time of the earth's most dim and secret

recesses, where storms cannot reach, and acaroely the forest beasts dare penetrate Agam the poor benighted brain finds relief. Down beside these monsters his eyes are gladdened

Jown bester their motivaters me type are guounteed once more with the fleeting vision. He sees the figure moving ahead, but slowly now, no longer is she the gay hughing creature he has bitherto followed, she moves wearily, as though exhausted by the journey she has taken. His heart thrills with hope and yoy, for now he knows that he is overtaking her. Her faces is hadden from him, and even her fair form has taken on something of the hue of her dark surroundings. "Aim-sa! Aim-sa!" he cries aloud. And again "Aim-sa!"

The gorge rings solemily with the hourse echoes, and the place is filled with discordant sounds which come back to his straining ears mingling with the cries of the wolves that still follow on his trail. The figure pauses, looks round, then continues cress of the wolves that still follow on his trail. The figure passets, looks round, then continues her slow paced movement; but she does not answer Still he sees her, she is there. And now he knows that he must come up with her. He tots on. He talks to himself, muttering as he goes, and a train of incoherent thought passes through his brain. He telfs homself that the journey is over Ste has browded him to the home which shall be where a dark peace reigns, and has ever reigned Where snow is not, and summer and winter are alike. It is the fitting home for a tortured spirit. The figure no longer moves now, but turns and faces him. The sweet familiar features seem to bend toward him out of the deep shadows and the grim surroundings. He shakes back his shappy hair: he holds himself proudly erect as he anproaches the woman he loves. He summons all his failing strength. His knees forget their wearsness, his torn feet are unconscious of their min-

250

IN THE REGODING WILD

ries. The haunting cry of the wolves comes down to him from behind, but he heeds only the beckoning phantom. Every trailing stride lessens the distance between

He sees her stoop as though to adjust her moccasin. She moves again, but she does not stand erect. A half-articulate cry breaks from him She is coming to him. Now he sees that her head is bowed as though in deep humbity. A cry breaks from him, then all is silent. Suddenly she lifts her head and her tall figure stands erect, gazing upon him with sombre, steady eyes, eyes which seem to have caught something of the dull hue of that awesome gorge. His heart leaps with joy How tall she is; what a superh form. She moves toward him, her body swaying gracefully to the rhythm of her gail. Her arms are stretched out appealingly, and he seet that she is clad in the rich furs of the North, clad as though for a journey. He tells lumself, with a stril, of mad desire, that she is ready for their journey, the journey of life they will travel together

Now the wolf cree come londer and more force. He as deaf to thom the woman is not. Her head turns sharply and a firere light leage rate her eyes to the change is of the leage trans the rest out his arms and staggers towards her. They come together, and he feels the soft touch of her far robes upon his face and hashis. Her arms close about him and her warm breath fams he ferered about him and her warm breath fams he ferered to her losses. The stage of the stage to her losses the stage of the stage to her losses the stage between the stage of the stage But what is that? The embrace draws tight, tighter and yet tighter, he becomes rigid in her arms, he cannot breathe, and hife seems to be going from him. He feels his rish cracking under the pressure; he cannot cry out, he cannot struggik. Now comes the round of accompling ripping, of flesh being torn by ruthless claws. A quiver of nerves, a sigh, and the man is still.

IN THE RECODERS WILL

252

Down the path of that woful gorge in a headlong rush comes the wolf-pack. A great figure with folling body looks up. Its broad head and short muzzle are poised alertly. So it stands, and under its merciless fore paws is the mangled corpse of Nick Westley It is a monstrous grizzly, monstrous even for its kind. It turns from its victim with shambling but swiftly moving gait, growling and snarling with terrible ferocity as it goes, but never hesitating. This shaggy monarch is no coward, but he is cunning as any fox, and, unlike the mountain lion, knows the limitation of his powers. He knows that even his gigantic strength could not long make stand against the oncoming hords. What he leaves behind will check the fanged legions while he makes good his escape.

The pack pours like a hideous flood over the spot where the last act of Nick Westley's tragedy has been played out. A brief but fiendish tumult, and little remains to tell of the sorry drams. The impassive mountains, unmoved spectators, give no sign. The stupendous retigence of the wilderness. like the fall of a mighty curtain, closes over the scene, taking the story into its mysolable keeping, THE BND.

E.C. Page & Company's Announcement List

of Mew Siction

D. ROBERTS, author of "Red Fox," "The Watchers of the Trails," etc. Cloth, one volume, with many drawings by Charles Liv-lagaton Brill, four of which are in full color . $0.00

The stories in Mr. Robertis our collection are the storage eth sets be har ever written.
He has largely taken for this subjects those unimals rarely med with an books, whose lives are open *1 in the Stimens,* where they are the superior relates. Mr. Roberts has write ton of them sympathetically, as always, but with fine regard for the scientific most for the contention of the scientific most the scientific most sets.

"As a writer about animals, fife Roberts occupies an certable phone. He is the gone (Retray, as will as the toust (maginative and vivid of all the nature writers." Brooklyn Engle. "Ello selmal stories are marvets of sympathetic science and Exercity exactness."—New York World.

L. C. PAGE AND COMPANY'S

The Lady of the Blue Motor.

G. Sconey Paressource, suther of "The Cruise of the Motor-Boat Conqueror," " The Motor Pirate." etc. Cloth decorative, with a colored frontispiece by John C.

. . $1.50 The Lady of the Blue Motor is an audacious beroine who drove her mysterious car at herakunck speed. How plea for assistance in an adventure promoune more than a smice of danger could not of course be discretarded by any gallant fellow motorist. Mr Patermoster's hero mos promptly to the occasion. Acrons France they tore and across the English Channel. There, the escanade past, he lost ber Mr Paternoster, however is generous, and allows the reader to follow their separate adventures until the Lady of the Rive Motor is found again and properly vindicated of all save woman't courage and affection A unions romonce, one continuous exciting series of adventure. Clementina's Highwayman, By Rossay

NEELSON STEPWERS, author of "The Flight of Georgiana," " An Enemy to the Kine," etc. Clotk decorative. Jostrated

. #1 co Mr Stephess has put into his new book, "Clementing's Highwayman," the finest qualities of plot, construction, and Magrary Snish The story as laid in the mid-Georgian period. It is a dashing, sparkling, vivacious comedy, with a beroing as lovely and changeable as an April day, and a hero all ardor sed daring The exquisite quality of Mr Seconesa's Interacy style clothes the story in a rich but delicate word-fabric, and never before have his setting and atmosphere been as movdect.

The Sorceross of Rome. By HATBAR GALsazzter, nother of "Cautel del Monte," etc.

Cleth decorative, allustrated

The love-enery of Oras 111, the boy emparer, and Sopphases, wife of the Senster Crescoption of Rome, has already been made the boso of various Gorman pooms and

Mr. Gallisser has used at for the mass thome of "The Sorceren of Rome," the second book of his trilogy of commerce on the medieval life of Italy. In detail and fitting the been to a bettern where of with describing clearly an excit or and strenuous ternol. It consesses the some qualities as "I asset del Monte, of mhigh the faction Found Herald and "There is color there is sumptiment Trivillation and I fo are in every part, brilliant descriptions. entertain the reader, mystic scenes and prophecies give a progretar fascination to the tale, which is strong and lovesfol in its portrayal."

Monter of the Hills. By Garma Clay

Cloth decorative, illustrated * House of the H-fb " has a motif around in his and new to fiction. Its hero, who has only acquired his sum strength and recovered sinces, by a Ideland structle against constitutional frasts has come to make the overnor of boddy soundars his dominant thought. He resolves to etimes strong constitutions to bis children by married a physically perfect troman. After long march he finds this rical in Figure the describer of a "cracker sountier" of the Ozark Mountains of Mamour: But, he forcet to take man compeleration that very vatal emption love, which

It is an ingressor combination of practical realism and imaginative fiction worked and its a thereunder deficiely and esticiving climan, minered haven such has medicand edens.

L C PAGE AND COMPANY'S

Prisoners of Fortune, A TALK OF THE MASSA-CHDSSTTS BAY COLONY BY RUEL PERLEY SMITH, author of "The Rival Campers," etc.

Cloth decorative, with a colored frontispiece by Frunk T Merril $1.50

The period of life. Smith's story is the beginning of the eligible and century, when the alterns of the American consists were accessed and the steep algorithed by the consists were accessed and part of the property of the consists of the

The times were seen and the colonius were hardy, but they loved as truly and tenderly as in more practful day. Thus, while the bero's advertures with preston and has earch for their hadden treasure is a record of desperate encounters and daring deeds, has love-viory and his wiening of awart Many Vane is in designful contrast.

The Rome Express. By Major Arthur Gre-PITMs, author of "The Pamengur from Calais," etc. Cloth decorative, with a colored frontispace by A. O Scott

A mynterious mender on a flying capeen Iram, a wily Italian, a charming woman caught in the menders of circumstantial widence, a chivalrous Englahama, and a police force with a keep mose for the wrong clue, are the ingrindent forom which Major Giffish has acconcred a chever, up-date detectors usery. The book is bright and speltal, the story to a bottom in the control of the control of the control of solution in the control of the control of solution and control of the control of solution and demonstrate solution.

The Morning Glory Club. By GROMAN A.

KYLE.

Cloth decorative, with a colored freetispless by A. O.

The dongs of the Morning Glory Club will furnish genue near ammerment to the reader. Originally forzed to estewate "the village, it quickly develops not an exchange for nowe goats." It has a saving grace, however, in the period of motherly Mrs. Stout, the uncutined but sweet-salared and pure-minded village whitesopher, who power the old of her annexes and charity on the troubled waters of discussion and condemnation.

It is a series of clear and interesting pictures of the bu-

It is a series of clear and interesting pictures of the bumor of village life.

The Chronicles of Martin Hewitt, Detective. New ILLUSTRATED EDITION BY AR-TRUE MORRISON, author of "The Green Diamond,"

"The Red Triangle," etc.

Cloth decorative, with siz full-name drawings by W. Kirk-

Disamond." Same "The Kell Triangle," has sed to his importance demand for the reliance of "The Chronicals of Martin Hewiti," which has been out of print for a comber of years. It will be resemblered that Martin Hewiti in the detective in "The Red Triangle," of whom the New York Trisime and "Better than Sherbick Holmens." His advantures in the London slurin were of such a nature that the Philadelishka Nerdal American und "The reader who has

Prilime and "Detter than Shetick Holmes" His adventures in the London atoms were of such a share that the Philadelphia Merch American and "The reader who has a graun of fancy or simplication may be defined to by this book down once he has begun it ustill the last word is reached."

$1 60

Mystery Island, By Rowan H Russy

Cloth decorative, with a colored frontenucce A hunting camp on a swampy wland in the Florida Everglades furnishes the background for this present-day tale. By the murder of one of they number, the accret of errom from the usuand is leat, and the campers find themarives mareoned. Cut off from c vilization, conventional veneer soon wears sway Love hate and revenue mouse up and after the present passons have had they away the man and the woman. are left alone to fulfil their own desting While there is much that a unusual in the plot and its development Mr. Hurst has handled his subject with floor delicacy, and the tale of their love on the beautiful little toland is told with door symmethy and feeling,

The Flying Cloud. By HORLEY ROBBETS, author of "The Promotion of the Admiral," "Rachel Mary " " The Idlers " etc.

Coth decerative, with a colored fracticolore fit to Mr Roberts's new book to much more than a ripping good sea story such as might be expected from the author of "The Promotion of the Admira." In "The Flying Cloud " the waters and the wade are ends personaled.

Their every mood and phase are described in words of telling force. There is no world but the water of waters. Mr Roberts glories and easies in the mystery, the paselem, the strength of the elements as did the Vik-ne chooskniert of old. He understands them and loves them and interprets them as no other writer has berganfore done. The book is too beg for conventional phrases. It needs Mr. Roberts a own richness of imagery and masterly unpression to describe adequately the word-pictures in this enic of wind and waves.

Selections from L. C. Page and Company's

List of Fiction

WORKS OF ROBERT NEILSON STEPHENS

Each one vol., library zame, cloth decorative The Flight of Georgiann

A ROMANCE OF THE DAYS OF THE YOUNG PRETENDER. Himtested by H. C. Edwards.

"A loye-story in the blokest degree, a dashor story and a re-

$1.00

"A love-story in the highest degree, a dashing story, and a remarkably will inside piece of mode." Change Record-Hereld.

The Bright Face of Danger
Beling an account of some adventures of Herel de Lauran, son of Being an account of scene actentures of Herri de Lauray, son of the Situr de in Tourours. Illustrated by H. C. Edwards. "Mr Stephene has fairly outdone houself. We thank bits. heartily The story is nothing if not spirited and entertaining, rational and convincion." Seaton Transcript.

hearthy. The story is nothing it not spirited and entertaints rational and convincing,"—Baston Transcrapt,

The Mystery of Murray Davemport.

(40th thousand.)
"This is easily the best thing that Mr. Stephens has yet done.
Those familiar with he other rovels can best judge the measure of this podes, which is sensorous"— Basile News.

Captain Ravenskaw
On, The Maid of Chearston (4nd thousand) A remande of Elizabethua London. Eliustrations by Howard Pyle and other artists.

Not since the abscriping adventures of D'Artagnan have we had

The Confidental Dragoon

A ROMANCE OF PRILIPER MANON HOUSE IN 1778. (cel.

A ROMANCE OF PRICEPS MANON HOUSE IN 1778. (536 thousand.) Bustrated by H C Edwards. A stirring romance of the Revolution, with its some laid on pentral teritors.

L. C. PAGE AND COMPANYS

Phillp Winwood

(noth thousand.) A Sketch of the Domestic History of an American Cantain on the West of Independence embracing executs that occurred between and during the years 1963 and 1984 in New York and Loudon. Elustrated by E. W. D. Hamilton.

An Enemy to the King everb thousand.) From the "Recently Discovered Memoirs of the Slear de la Tenmore " Himirated by H. De M. Young

An historical romance of the sixteenth century, describing the adventures of a votery French nobleman at the court of Henry 11L. and on the field with Henry IV The Boad to Perla

Syray or Anyeserres. (24th thousand). Hastrated by H C Edwards.

An historical remance of the eighteenth century, being an account of the life of an American gentleman adventurer of Jacobite an-A Gentleman Player

HIS ADVENTURES ON A SECRET MISSION FOR QUEEN ELITA-BETH (alth thousand.) Elustrated by Frank T Memil-

The story of a young pentleman who ious Shakemeart's company of players, and becomes a friend and protege of the great

WORKS OF CHARLES G. D. ROBERTS

Red For THE STORY OF HIS ADVENTUROUS CAREER IN THE RINGWARE WILDS, AND DE HIS FIRST, TRIUMPS OVER THE EMERICA OF Res. Kours. With fifty (Postrutions, redoding fourtispines in color and cover design by Charles Lavingston Bull.

Songer marte, cloth decorative . $2.00 "Infinitely more wholesoms reading than the average tale of spect, since it gives a gilmpse of the hunt from the point of view of the homed" ... Beston Transcript.

"True in substance but functivating an fiction. It will interest old and young, city-bound and free-footed, those who know animals and those who do not." - Chance Record-Heroid "A brilliant chapter in natural history."- Philodelphia North American.

The Klodred of the Wild A BOOK OF ARIBAL LIFE. With fifty-one full-page plates and many decorations from drawings by Charles Livenzeton Ball. Schare charto, decorative cover . * In in many ways the most brilliant rollection of enimal stories.

that has appeared, well named and wall dom." John Surrough. The Watchers of the Trails

A companies, volume to "The Kindsel of the Wild " With forty-eight ful.-page plates and many decorations from drawings by Charles Lavingston Bull

"Mr Roberts has written a most interacting series of tales free from the vices of the stories regarding garmais of many other writers, occurate in their facts and admirably and dramatically told." - Chicago Nemi "These stories are exquestic to their refinement, and yet pobasi-

In their appreciation of some of the rougher phases of woodcraft. Among the many writers about animals, Mr. Roberts occupies an enviable place." The Omtired. " Thus is a book full of deliah? An additional charm lies in Mr.

Bull's fasthful and graphic illustrations, which in fashion all their own tell the story of the wad life, Commating and supplementing the pen pictures of the author " .- Literary Direct.

Barth's Enlemas

A new edition of Mr. Roberts's first volume of fiction, published to 1801, and out of print for several years, with the addition of three new stories, and ten illustrations by Charles Livingston Rell Library 1 pmn, gloth, decorative cover " It will rank high among collections of short stories. In "Earth's Eeigesan' is a wider range of subject than in the "Kindred of the Wild." - Reverse from advance cheeks of the illustrated editors by Tiffore Blake in the Chicago Evening Part.

Barbara Ladd Boston Transcript.

With four illustrations by Frank Verback. Library 12000. gilt top " From the opening chapter to the fixel page Mr. Roberts lures es on by his rapt devotion to the changing aspects of Nature and by his keen and sympathetic analysis of human character '-

L. C. PAGE AND COMPANY'S

Cameron of Lochiel

Translated from the French of Philippe Aubert de Gaspé, with frontissurce as color by H. C. Edwards. Library camp, cloth decorative .

"Predouces Enhants deserves the thunks of his reader for storing a wider audience an opportunity to error this striking but of French Canadian literature," - Grooties Sarie "It is not often in these days of sensational and philosophical movels that one micks up a book that so touches the heart."-

Roston Transcript. The Prisoner of Madentoiselle

With frontispiece by Frank T. Merrill. Library 12000, cloth decorative, gilt top A tale of Acadia, - a land which is the author's heart's delight, - of a valuet young liguterant and a winsome malder, who first "Thus is the shed of a story that makes one grow younger, more innocent, more light-hearted. Its literary quality in improcable. It is not every day that such a heroine blossoms into even temporary existence, and the very name of the story bears a breath of charm." - Charge Record-Herald

The Beart of the Auclent Wood With hix illustrations by James L. Weston.

Library 20mo, decorative cover "One of the most faccinating novels of recent days." -- Beston Fevrnal. * A classic tweatieth_century remarce." - New York Commercial

The Force in the Forest. Being the Nurrative of the Acadian Ranger, Jean de Mer, Seigneur de Briert, and how he crossed the Black Abbé, and of his adventures in a strange fellowship. Illustrated by Henry Sundham, R. C. A. Library 12mo, cloth, gilt ton A story of nurs love and haroic advantage.

By the Marshes of Mines Library came, cloth, gift top, illustrated Most of these remances are in the author's lighter and more playful voin, each is a unit of absorbing interest and expossite work marship.

A Sister to Evengeline Being the Story of Vyorne de Lamourie, and how ske went into exile with the villagers of Grand Pré-WORKS OF Library 12750, cloth, gilt top, illestrated Swift action, fresh atmosphere, wholesome purity, deep passion, and searthuar analysis characterize this strong novel.

LILIAN BELL

Hope Loring

Illustrated by Frank T Mordil. Library 12mo, cloth, decorative never . . . . $1.50

"Lillan Bell's new payel, 'Have Lovine,' does for the American girl in fiction what Gibson has done for her in art. "Task alender, and athletic, fragio-looking, yet with nerves and sinears of steel nucles the velvet flesh, frunk as a hot and tenden and beautiful as a woman, free and independent, yet not bold -such is 'Hope Legge,' be long odds the subjest study that has yet been made of the American girl." - Dorocky Dix, in the New York American.

Abroad with the Jimmies

With a portrait, in decementry, of the sethor-

Library 12000, cloth, decarative cover . . $t. to " Fall of ozone, of snap, of girger, of swing and momentum " . Chicago Evening Post. Is one of her best and cleverest novels filled to the brite with unusung accidents and experiences. This vivacious narva-

tive needs no commendation to the readers of Miss Bell's well-known earlier books "- N Y Prace At Home with the Jardines

A companion volume to " Abroad with the Jimmin."

Library 12mp, cloth decorative

"Bits of gay humor sanny, whimstead philosophy, and keen andebitable soxight sate the less evident aspects and workings of pure burnen pature, with a stender thread of a cleverly extraneous loveatory, keep the interest of the reader freels, and the charmingly oldfashioned happy enting is to be generously contrauded. Typical, characteristic Lilian Bell sketches, bright, breary, azzusing, and philosophic." - Chicago Excerd-Herold.

t. C. PAGE AND COMPANY'S

The Interference of Patricia

With a fronteniece from drawing by Frank T. Marrill Small ramp, cloth, decorative cover

$1.25 "There is life and action and bellliancy and dash and eleverness and a keen appreciation of business ways in this story."- Grand Ratids Herald

"A story full of keen and flashing sation." - Chicago Record-

A Book of Girls With a frontiselece Small 12010, doth, decorative cover $1.25

"The stories are all eventful and have effective humon" -- Now Yest Con "Lilian Bell secely understands eigh, for she depicts all the variations of oid nature so charmingly " Charge fourwal The above two volumes based sa special holiday dress, per sel, $250

WORKS OF

ALICE WarGOWAN AND GRACE Mar-GOWAN COOKE

Peturn

A STORY OF THE SEA ISLANDS IN 1740. With six (Dustrations he C. D. Williams. Library 12mo, cloth . "So rick in color is this story, so growded with figures, it seems like a hit of old Trains wall painting a slave of modern typestre. rather than a modern fabric woven deftly from the threads of fact and fancy gathered up in this new and essentially practical country. and therein lies as districtive value and excellence " A V. Sue "At once tender, thrilling, autorescue, philosophical, and dramatic. One of the most delightful remances we have had in many a day " - Cheeren Record, Merald

The Grapple With feculispiece in color by Arthur W. Brown.

Library tauto, cloth decorative . $1.00 "The movement of the tale is swift and dramatic. The story is en original, so strong, and so finely told that it deserves a large and thoughtful public. It is a book to read with both encounseit and enlightenment."—N. Y. Times Sabarder Retriev of Books.

The Last Word

Illustrated with seven portraits of the heroine. Library 12mo, cloth, gilt top "When one receives full measure to overdowing of delight in a tender, charming, and wholly fascinating new trace of fiction, the enthuriant is not to come nonermost. Miss MacGowan has been

wills Dest BOOK LAD

Library ramo, cloth deco

With illustrations by Fanny Y Core.

known before, but her best gift has here declared itself."- Louds-

. . . . . $1.00

$t 50

Here we have the great-hearted, capable woman of the Texas plains dispensing food and gental piclosophy to rough-andready cowboys. Her sympathy takes the form of happy laughter and her delightfully furnty phrases amuse the fancy and stick in one's Methory

THEORY MORLEY ROBERTS

Rachel Darr

By MORLEY ROSERTS. Library 1200c. cloth decorative . . . .

* A novel of tremendous force, with a style that is sure, lexuriant, compelling full of color and vital force." - Elia W Peattle in Ch-care Tribune "In atmosphere, if nothing else, the story is absolutely parition." - Besten Transcript. " Will be widely read and shrewfly and arwiely commented upon through many years get to come " - Philadelphia North American "A solendidly wrought book, strong as the winds and waves are strong, and as proegariful as they of mean barriers" - Cheary

Lady Penelope

By MONLEY ROSERTS. With nine Blustrations by Arthur W. RIDWI.

"For calerity of movement, originality of plot, and fertifity of mvestion, not to meak of a decided audacity is situation, 'Lady Penelope" is easily ahead of anything in the opting output of firther " Chicago Mone

"A fresh and original bit of somedy as amusing as it is audacloss." - Rostes Transcript.

The Promotion of the Admiral

By MORLEY ROBERTS.

" If any one writes better sea stories than Mr. Roberts, we don't this it would be a joy to have the pleasure of reading it "- New

"There is a hearty laugh in every one of these stories."- The " To read these stories is a toste for the mind, the stories are gents, and for pith and vigor of description they are unequalled." -

. . . . . . . . . . STEPHEN CONRAD

The Second Mrs. Jim

N V Commercial Advertises

By STEPHEN CONSAD. With a frontispiece by Ernest Fosbery. Large (foro, cloth decorative . Here is a character as original and witty as "Mr Ducley" or "the self-made merchant." The realm of humorous fiction is now anyeded by the stepenother-"It is an exceptionally clever piece of work." - Baston Tronscript. "The Second Mrs. I'm, is worth as many Mrs. Wagger as could be coowded into the Cabbure Patch. The racy bustor and chaerfulness and wisdom of the book make it wholly delightful." Philadelphia Press

Mrs. Jim and Mrs. Jimmie With a frontisplece in colors by Arthur W. Brown.

Library 12000, cloth decorative This book is in a sense a sequel to "The Second Mrs. Jun." since it gives further glimpses of the delightful stepenother and her philosophy

"Plenty of fun and kerner in this book. Plenty of simple pathon and quietly keen depiction of human nature afford contrast, and every chapter is worth reading. It is a very human account of life to a small country town, and the work should be controunded for those sterling qualities of heart and naturalness so endearing to many "- Chicago Record-Herold.

Dafe Due
PR 1818	72
CIRC FE	172 2
FFR	5 RETURN
CIRC FE
-FB21		_
10.61	10.1111.11		-
_
	-
	_
-
*			-
-			-
-
_

2005165

9

SUNIVERSITY LIBRARY

2035165

PR Cullum, R. 6005 In the brooding U42I35 wild. PR 6005 U42 I35 1905 c.1 Cultum, Ridgwell, 1867-In the brooding wild. With a f